- 154a. — Appointment of one of several makers of promissory note.—During the lifetime of testator the exor. named in his will & three other persons made a joint & several promissory note payable to him. After the death of testator & probate of the will the exor. brought an action on the promissory note against one of the other makers thereof:—Held: the action was not maintainable, inasmuch as the effect of pltf.'s appointment as exor. was (1) at common law that the debt was discharged by release at the date of the death of testator, & (2) in equity that it was discharged by payment at the date of probate, so that in either case the debt had ceased to exist before the action was brought.—*JENKINS v. - 181a. — After intermeddling.—An individual & a bank having been appointed exors. & trustees under a will, the individual exor. intermeddled technically with the estate, & both of them subsequently refused to act as exor. or prove the will. By a codicil testator directed that in the event of a "vacancy" occurring "in the office of the individual exor. & trustee whether from death, resignation, refusal to serve, inability to act, or otherwise," one of two named persons, in the order named, should fill the vacancy. The first named person renounced:—Held: the ct. was entitled to appoint one of the substituted exors. & probate was granted to the second named person on his application.—In the Estate of FREEMAN (1931), 146 L. The notice was given within the time, but before the exors. had obtained probate:—Held: the notice was properly given, & the option had been duly exercised.—KELSEY v. KELSEY (1922), 91 L. J. O. 1927, c. 150, s. 36, for the removal of an exor., may now be made summarily upon originating notice. An order removing an exor. & trustee directed him to pass his accounts. It was not denied that he was liable for the loss or jeopardy of a considerable sum of money. He made a claim for the statutory compensation for his services which was not admitted; & he was required, pending the taking of the accounts, to replace the trust fund for which he was not able to show any security in hand.—Re PATTERSON, [1928] 3 D. Pltf. was not named as beneficiary in the policy. On May 9, 1927, while the action was pending, pltf. obtained from a Surrogate Ct. letters of administration to the estate of J., & when the action came on for trial, in 1928, applied for leave to amend the proceedings by describing himself as the administrator of the estate of J.:—Held: the amendment should be allowed & pltf. awarded judgment for the amount of the policy. The letters of administration related back so as to validate the action already commenced by pltf.—JOHNSON v. GENERAL ACC. ASS'CE CO., [1929] 1 D. L. R. 597; 63 O. L. R. 296.—CAN.

g1. ———.]—Held: the sale of the reversion in a term of years, under a fi. fa. on a judgment against an exor. de son tort, was a valid sale as against the rightful administrator.—BAIN v. MCINTYRE (1867), 17 C. P. 500.—CAN.

603 i. When binding—When lawful.—An exor. de son tort is not necessarily a wrong-doer & his possession cannot always be regarded as wrongful at its inception. His intentions in respect of the acts attributed to him must be taken into account, to determine when the conversion took place & as on what date liability is to be fastened on him.—SHIVAPRASAD SINGH v. PRAYAGKUMARI DEBEE (1933), 1 L. R. 61 Calo. 711.—IND.

sl. On whom binding—Third party—Estoppel.—Where a buyer of goods under a conditional sale agreement induces a buyer of the same goods from him under a similar agreement to deliver up the goods to the exor. de son tort of the original seller in settlement of his, the first buyer's claim, he will not be allowed, in an action against such second buyer, to deny the authority of the exor. de son tort to take over the goods.—LARSON v. COATES (Sask.), [1926] 4 D. L. R. 561; [1926] 3 W. W. R. 397.—CAN.

sm. ——— Administrator of estate—Onus on administrator.—Deft. had bought three horses & other animals under a conditional sale agreement. The present action was brought by the administrator of the seller for the balance due under the agreement. Deft. pleaded that the exor. de son tort of the seller had taken the horses in satisfaction of the indebtedness out of the possession of a man to whom deft. had sold them. The authority of the exor. de son tort to take the chattels & so bind the administrator was established by a prior decision in an action by the deft. herein against the buyer from him. There was no evidence herein as to what the exor. de son tort did with the chattels:—Held: the burden of proving that the exor. de son tort had complied with the terms of the agreement & of Conditional Sales Act as to retention of the chattels & notice of their sale was on pltf. herein, the administrator.—NATIONAL TRUST CO., LTD. v. LARSON, [1928] 3 W. W. R. 723.—CAN.

PART I. SECT. 15, SUB-SECT. 4.—B. (a).

ml. ———.]—In an action by a creditor of a deceased against an exor. de son tort it is proper to sue deft. as executor as well as personally, & if pltf. establishes his claim the judgment should be that the amount thereof be paid out of the assets of deceased, if deft. have so much, & if not, then out of deft.'s personal assets.—BURNS P. & CO. v. CZERNIL, [1928] 4 D. L. R. 854; [1928] 3 W. W. R. 294.—CAN.

sd. Will already administered—Not matter of construction.—Testator had, by his will, bequeathed his farm to his son J. on condition that he should reside on the farm & assist in the management thereof until he attained twenty years, with a gift over to testator's son W. in the event of this condition not being fulfilled. In 1928 J. attained twenty-one years, whereupon the surviving trustee of the will gave him possession of the farm. On the death of J. in 1930, W. brought a summons for the construction of the will. It was contended that J. was not entitled to the farm by reason of the fact that he had failed to comply with the conditions of the bequest. Pltf. submitted that the ct. had jurisdiction to determine the matter either under R. S. C., Ord. 54A, r. 4 or Ord. 55, r. 4:—Held: the trustee having administered & allowed J. into possession the question at issue was not a proper one to be determined on an originating summons either as a matter arising in the administration or upon the construction of the will.—WIGHTMAN v. COUSINS, [1931] N. I. 138; affd., [1932] N. I. 61.—IR.

PART II. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.—A. (b).

703 i. For letters of administration—Grant required to assist prosecution of claims abroad.—It is not the duty of the ct., by determining the abstract question who is the deceased's proper representative, to assist such representative to prosecute claims to titles & property abroad.—In the Goods of CAMPBELL WILSON, [1929] S. R. (Q.) 59.—AUS.

PART II. SECT. 5, SUB-SECT. 1.

sg. Will mutilated—By accident.—Testator made a will, which was discovered, a year after his death, mutilated by the destruction of parts thereof containing certain words of the will. The state of the will when discovered was due to the way in which it had been kept by testator. Testator had also made a draft will, as well as a pretended will, but no copy of his last will, & no oral evidences as to the

912. Add. Annotation:—Consd. In the Estate of Dinshaw, [1930] P. 180.

919a. — Power to act as executor given by Act of Irish Free State.]—By Public Trustee Act, 1906 (c. 55), & Public Trustee (Custodian Trustee) Rules, 1926, r. 30, made thereunder, a corpn. constituted under the law of the United Kingdom or any part thereof & having a place of business there & empowered by its constitution to undertake trust business within the meaning of Public Trustee Act & the rules in question is expressly empowered to act as trustee & exor. & administrator, & power to grant representation to a trust corpn. is conferred by Supreme Ct. of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 161. By an Act of the Irish Free State passed in 1929, after the separation from Great Britain, the Bank of Ireland was for the first time authorised to act as exor. or administrator. The Bank of Ireland has places of business in Northern Ireland, therefore in the United Kingdom. A testator domiciled in the Irish Free State, by his will dated in 1931, appointed the governor & co. of the Bank of Ireland his exor. Amongst the assets was personal estate domiciled in England. As a preliminary to the issue of a grant of probate in England to the English estate the Bank moved for leave to swear by its representative that it fulfilled the definition of a "corpn." in the Acts & Rules:—Held: the Bank having been empowered to undertake the business in question only since the establishment of the Irish Free State, had that power within the Free State only & was not for the purpose of the motion a "corpn. constituted under the law of the United Kingdom or any part thereof," & the motion accordingly failed.—Re BARLOW (H. T.), [1933] P. 184; 102 L. J. P. 84; 149 L. T. 456; 49 T. L. R. 544; 77 Sol. Jo. 524.

924a. —.]—Ct. of Probate Act, 1857 (c. 77), s. 73, confers wide powers on the ct. Under it an exor., not willing or competent to take probate, may be replaced by an administrator to be appointed by the ct., if it shall appear to be necessary or convenient by reason of special circumstances. Misfeasance on the part of an exor. with regard to the estate of his testator is a ground for proceeding under the sect., even after the exor. has inter-meddled.

Exors. had intermeddled & neglected to prove the will, & had made an agreement with the universal legatee that the will should not be proved. In passing them over the ct. ordered that a grant of administration should be made to a third person to be agreed upon by the exors. & the legatee, or in default to be appointed by the ct.—In the Estate of POTTICARY, [1927] P. 202; 96 L. precise form of the last will as it stood before becoming mutilated was forthcoming. The ct. made an order for probate of the will, in so far as the same was legible, & so far as the same was illegible, in the words & figures contained in a copy of the will which, as regards the missing portions, had been reconstructed from the context of the will, from the draft will & from the pretended will.—In the Goods of WRIGHT (1908), 44 I. rk. — Intentionally.]—Testator made a will. Subsequently he stated to witnesses that he had cut a certain beneficiary out of his will. To one of these witnesses, after having stated what he had done, he showed a strip of paper, which he informed the witness was the piece of his will which he had cut out, & which he thereupon threw into the fire, where the witness saw it burning. After his death, on the will being opened, it was found to have a piece cut out of it. Probate decreed of the will in its mutilated condition.—In the Goods of BENTLEY, [1930] I. R. 455.—IR.

PART II. SECT. 5, SUB-SECT. 5.

r. i. — Photostat copy.]—Proceedings were instituted to prove a will in solemn form. The will had already been admitted to probate in England, & was deposited in the Principal Probate Registry of the High Ct., London. The ct. admitted a photostat copy of the will to probate, it having been sealed & certified. Such a document, if consisting of several pages, should be sealed on every page & certified on the last.—In the Goods of TRACEY, LENNON v. GRAY, [1931] I. R. 374.—IR.

r. ii. — Will proved in Sweden.]—When a will has been probated, or recognised as a valid will, in a jurisdiction other than a British country or a State of the United States of America, probate may be granted by a Surrogate Ct. in Saskatchewan upon production of a copy of the will & of the decree of probate or other act of recognition thereof, & without requiring further evidence of its validity. The extract in question herein, from the records of a District Ct. in Sweden, & the sworn translation thereof, quoted in the judgment, held admissible in evidence on an appln. for letters of administration with the will annexed of the estate of a husband who with his wife had executed a joint will in Sweden.—Re BERGMAN, [1928] 1 W. sn. Where suspicion arises only as to particular provisions.]—In all cases in which a will is prepared under circumstances which raise the suspicion of the ct. that it does not express the mind of testator, it is for those who pro-pound the will to remove that suspicion, & it is only when that has been done that the onus is thrown on those who oppose the will to prove fraud or undue influence. Where the suspicion arises only as to one particular provision which is severable, & that suspicion is not removed the ct. can admit the rest of the document to probate.—*SARAT KUMARI DEBI v. 2585d. — Death of settlor fifty years earlier—Personal representatives not traced.]—G. died in 1882 & the chain of representation to his estate was not known & could not be ascertained without considerable expense. E., testator, died on Mar. 27, 1930, & the present appcts., who were his exors., had taken probate of his will in due course save & except land vested in testator which was settled previously to his death & not by his will & remained settled land notwithstanding his death. Testator was interested in land settled by the will of G. as follows: (a) he was tenant for life for the purposes of Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), of a portion of the N. estate subject to a compound settlement consisting of the will of G. together with an indenture of resettlement of the N. estate dated Sept. 25, 1909; (b) he was absolute owner of certain portions of the N. estate, which by reason of a rentcharge upon them continued to be settled land after his death. These portions were included in a settlement created by the will of G. but were not subject to the compound settlement or the resettlement. They were therefore the subject of a separate settlement; (c) certain portions of the N. estate of which testator was absolute owner were subject to the same conditions as to title as (b) but testator had exonerated these latter from the incidence of the rentcharge as between the various portions of the estate, but he could only do so in so far as the income from both (b) & (c) was adequate to meet the rentcharge. As regards the burden of the rentcharge as a whole both (b) & (c) remained subject to it in favour of the chargee. Of these interests in settled land of testator all three remained subject to the rentcharge, the object of which was to provide an annuity to the still surviving widow of G., & apart from the operation of Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 30 (3), for the purposes of that Act, there were originally no trustees of any of these interests of testator under the settlement created by the will of G. On July 22, 1931, S. & W. had already as trustees of the compound settlement & resettlement obtained a grant of special probate to testator as his special exors. limited to settled land, vested in him as tenant for life under the compound settlement & resettlement. Probate of testator's will having excluded settled land there was no representation in respect of the settled land of which he was absolute owner which remained settled land because of the existence of the rent-

charge. On the application of the general exors. of the will of testator the ct. revoked the earlier probate & granted general probate to them save & except settled land, of which special exors. had already been appointed by the grant dated July 22, 1931, under the authority of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 155, without citing the personal representatives (if any) of the settlor, G.—In the Estate of POWELL, [1935] P. 114; 104 L. 3022a. Absence of necessary party—Non-disclosure of material facts.]—On an ex parte motion in this matter in Dec. 1933, a grant of administration with the will annexed was made to creditors of deceased, & the ct., in dispensing with the citation of the exor., expressed it as an exceptional course which should not be regarded as justifying in ordinary cases any relaxation of the usual practice of giving an exor., by a formal notice, the opportunity of appearing before the ct. In July, 1935, the exor. applied for the revocation of the grant, & after fresh evidence the President revoked the grant which he had made, on the ground that on the original motion material facts had not been disclosed which, had they been disclosed, would have caused him to require the citation of the exor. In the order embodying the grant the administrators were not described as creditors, & it was directed that in all future grants of administration to a creditor he should be so described in the order. The administrators appealed against the revocation of the grant:—Held: the decision of the President must be affirmed, owing to non-disclosure of material facts. The President had jurisdiction to revoke his own grant, because it had been made in the absence of a necessary party.—In the Estate of LEGUIA (A. B.) (1936), 105 L. J. P. 72; 155 L. T. 270, C. A.

3127a. —.—]—The proviso to R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 1, that nothing in that rule contained shall deprive an exor. who has not unreasonably instituted or carried on or resisted any proceedings, of any right to costs out of a particular estate or fund to which he would be entitled according to the rules theretofore acted upon in the Chancery Div., governs the case of bare exors. who reasonably propound a will & codicil, even if, though the will is pronounced for, the codicil is pronounced against. The position of such exors. differs from that of persons named as exors. in a testamentary paper which they unsuccessfully propound. Having established the validity of the will, & made good their position as testator's exors., they are entitled to their costs of the litigation out of the estate as between solr. & client, & can be deprived of that right, which rests substantially upon contract, only if they have acted culpably or unreasonably. Until that has been established, their costs are not in the discretion of the ct., & notwithstanding Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 49, repealed & reenacted by Jud. (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 31 (1) (h), an appeal lies without leave from an order condemning them in costs or depriving them of costs out of the estate.—*In the Estate of PLANT, WILD v. 3127b. —.—]—The principle of the decision in In the Estate of Plant, Wild v. Plant, No. 3127a, ante, that exors. who have established the validity of their will are entitled to their whole costs of the litigation, although they fail in establishing a codicil, does not extend in all cases to costs incurred by them by reason of their insisting upon probate not only of clauses in a will expressing the testamentary mind of their testator, but also of a clause which is found not to be his testamentary act. If a residuary gift is excluded from probate on the ground of want of capacity the question still arises whether the costs so incurred by the exors. are due to their "violation or culpable neglect of duty." If the ct. finds on this issue that an exor. is a wrongdoer, his prima facie right to receive out of the estate costs not otherwise provided for is displaced.—THOMAS v. Application of rule.—Detinue.—The administrator of the estate of a deceased person cannot recover damages, in respect of a chattel belonging to the deceased, for its detention or seizure during his lifetime, or prior to the issue of the letters of administration, unless there is evidence to show that the chattel was damaged, or that the estate of the deceased was depreciated by the seizure or detention in that period. The administrator, however, is entitled to recover for the estate damages for being deprived of the use & possession of the chattel after the issue of the letters of administration.—DAY v. 3692a. —.]—In my view Collis v. Flower, No. 3691, was wrong, for the reasons that I have been stating. The common law tenancy was terminated. The exor. had a common law tenancy, & it was terminated by notice to quit. He did not remain in occupation of the house, & in my view, the art. 451, be considered as having been acquired day by day & belonging to the usufructuary in proportion to the duration of his usufruct.

Es. who was entitled under the will & a deed of gift of his father to certain dividends payable by a co. of which his father had been the founder & sole shareholder, died three days before the declaration of dividends on its preferred & common stocks out of profits admittedly earned during E.'s lifetime. On a claim by applt., the widow & executrix & universal legatee of E., to the proportionate share of the dividends so declared which she alleged was due to her husband at the date of his death under the will & deed of gift:—Held: (1) although E. was not a usufructuary under the deed of gift, having only a right as beneficiary to share in certain "fruits & revenues" (the dividends) distributed from time to time by the trustees under the deed of gift, he was, by virtue of the provisions of art. 981 (a) to (n) of the Civil Code of Quebec, a beneficiary under the deed of gift & the will with personal rights against the fiduciary donees & the fiduciary legatee respectively; (2) art. 451 of the Civil Code was applicable by analogy to the rights of a beneficiary under the will & deed of gift in respect of the dividends declared by the co. The dividends in question, therefore, were civil fruits subject to the principle contained in art. 451 that they should be considered to have been acquired day by day, & E.'s widow was accordingly entitled to her husband's proportionate share of the dividends which were in fact declared three days after his death.—LAVERDURE v. DU TREMBLAY, [1937] A. C. 666; 106 L. J. P. C. 107, P. C.—CAN.

original tenant having no right, as we have now decided, to dispose of the property by will, had no right to give any statutory right to the exor., & the exor., who had not lived in the house, could not claim to be a statutory tenant. In my view, therefore, Collis v. Flower, No. 3691, is no longer an authority.

The administrator case stands on a different footing, because one has to look in all these cases to see what the facts were. The administrator case is the case of Mellows v. Low, No. 3692. There the facts were different. The original tenant was a weekly tenant. It was a common law tenancy, & during her tenancy she died intestate. Consequently, whatever rights she had in her common law tenancy remained to her representatives in an intestacy. No notice to quit was ever given. Consequently the common law tenancy remained. Then the landlord claimed that on the death of the tenant intestate, with no member of her family residing in the house, the tenancy lapsed. It was held that the administratrix was a person who derived title under the original tenant, & consequently, that the residence could not be interfered with. The point of that case which renders it a right decision is that no notice to quit the common law tenancy had ever been given. The common law tenancy, therefore, remained, & it remained in the person who at common law was entitled to it, & her tenancy had never been terminated. Consequently, Mellows v. Low, No. 3692, on the facts, is right, but if notice to terminate the common law tenancy had been given the ct. could not, in my opinion, have said, unless the matter could be brought within the very curious clause about intestacy to which I have referred, that such an administratrix not being in possession is entitled to be protected by the Act (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—SKINNER v. GEARY, [1931] 2 K. B. 546; 100 L. J. K. B. 718; 145 L. T. 675; 95 J. P. 194; 47 T. L. R. 597; 29 L. G. R. 599, C. A.

By a vesting deed dated Apr. 16, 1926, the lands were declared to be vested in J. in fee upon the trusts operating from time to time under the will of H. or otherwise. J. died Apr. 27, 1928. General probate of his will including the settled land was granted to his exors. in the first place. Later the grant was amended limiting it "save & except the settled land vested in testator settled previously to his death & remaining settled notwithstanding his death." J. having died without issue appt. T. then became tenant for life in possession under the settlement created by the will of C. as well as the trustee of that settlement. S. M.,

1913, is to be considered one of the "exceptions."

A farmer died intestate leaving four dependent infant children. The administrator of his estate sold certain chattels which were during the lifetime of the deceased "exemptions" under Executions Act, s. 29. On an application by the administrator for directions as to the disposition of the moneys realised from the sale, the creditors of the deceased, none of whom had recovered judgment, contended that the right of exemption terminated on the deceased's death; that all the assets of the deceased, including the exemptions, were liable for his debts; & that even if the chattels continued to be exempt, the proceeds of their sale was not exempt:—Held: the administrator, who had also been appointed guardian, held the money received from the sale of the exemptions for the benefit of the children.—Re MCKENZIE ESTATE (Man.), [1930] 1 D. 4101b. — “According to value”—Meaning of “value.”—In Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), Sched. I., Part II., para. 6, “Property specifically devised or bequeathed, rateably according to value,” the word “value” means the value to testator. Where, therefore, property is devised subject to a mtge. created by testator, & other property is devised burdened with the payment of specified legacies, & the personal estate of testator is insufficient to pay pecuniary legacies & debts, in order to ascertain the proportion payable the word “value” means the value of the property to testator & not the value of the property to the devisees. The “value” in the case of the property burdened with the mtge. is the value of the property less the amount of the mtge., whereas in the case of the property burdened with the payment of legacies the amount of the legacies is not to be deducted to ascertain the “value” of the property.—Re JOHN, JONES v. JOHN, [1933] Ch. 370; 102 L. J. Ch. 72; 148 L. T. 450.

His widow, who had taken out letters of administration, having in her husband's lifetime advanced him certain moneys for the purpose of his business, & having after his death received certain sums which formed part of his estate & which equalled the amount so advanced by her, on Feb. 1, 1935, paid them as his administratrix into her own private account. On Feb. 8 an order was made for the administration of her deceased husband's estate in bkpcy., the sums then still remaining in her hands. These sums paid into her own private account having been claimed by the official receiver as trustee of the husband's estate, who alleged that by virtue of Bkpcy. Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 36 (2) (replacing Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 3) & Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), the widow had no right of retainer as against other creditors, a special case was at the request of both parties sent by the county ct. judge, before whom the matter first came, for the opinion & determination of the High Ct.:—Held: on Feb. 8, the widow had in her hands the sums in question forming part of her husband's estate & she had not made these sums her own by paying them in to her private account on Feb. 1, for she had no right of retainer as against the other debts due from the estate, which were all of higher degree than the debt owing to her, & the sums must accordingly be handed over to the official receiver.—*Re S. 4538a. Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 34 (1).]—Under sect. 34 (1), & the rules set out in Part I. of Sched. I., to Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), in the administration of insolvent estates an exor. has no right of retainer of a simple contract debt against the Crown so far as the Crown has priority under the bkpcy. rules affecting debt priorities; consequently the Crown has priority for a claim for taxes, not exceeding in the whole one year's assessment.

In my opinion there are now only two, or possibly three, degrees of priority of debts, being, first, those which are by the Bkpcy. Act expressly given priority; secondly, those which are expressly directed to be paid pari passu; & possibly, thirdly, those mentioned in Bkpcy. Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 36, & in sect. 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), the effect of the latter section being expressly retained in the Bkpcy. Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 33. It follows that the balance of any Crown debt in excess of that portion which is given priority is now of the same degree as the debt of the executrix in the present case, & that she can retain against such balance (LORD ATKIN).

The right still remains as before, the right to retain against debts of equal degree. Some debts have been put in a higher degree than to meet the full amount of the legacies, which were not paid within one year after the testator's death:—Held: (1) the interest payable to a legatee from one year after a testator's death on the amount of a legacy not paid by that date did not itself amount to a legacy, but was a sum paid in the course of administration; (2) accordingly, the legacies bequeathed to W. If payment was delayed in order thereby to benefit a residuary legatee, then, in the absence of a direction to the contrary, no interest upon such postponed legacies would be payable before the expiration of the prescribed period. But where the postponement was intended primarily to enable the exors. to collect & realise the assets, the postponed legacies would carry interest from such a time after the end of the "exors." year as the exors. had in hand realised assets which could rightfully be applied to the payment of such legacies.—MORPETH v. WILLIAMSON, [1926] N. Z. L. R. 39.—N.Z.

The whole of her residuary property of every kind she devised, bequeathed & appointed to her trustees upon trust to sell & out of the proceeds, first, to pay her funeral & testamentary expenses, debts, & the legacy duty; secondly, to appropriate & set apart two sums of £4,000 & £2,000 to be held upon certain trusts for life & then over; & thirdly, to pay a number of pecuniary legacies, including one of £600. Testatrix declared that should her residuary personal estate be insufficient to pay all the legacies then the legacy of £600 should be reduced to £500; & every legacy & annuity was bequeathed free of legacy duty. There was a deficiency in the estate;—Held: (1) there were sufficient indications in the will that the testatrix intended the distribution of her estate to be in accordance with the priorities mentioned, & the settled legacies must be paid in full before all the other pecuniary legacies; (2) the legacy of £600 must be reduced to £500 & this reduced legacy, plus the duty, must abate pro rata with the other postponed legacies, including those to the exors.; (3) the costs of packing & delivering specific legacies must be borne by the specific legatees.—*Re Leach, Milne v. 4937a. ————]—The testator by his will gave certain pecuniary legacies. He also gave an annuity of £250 per annum free of duty & free of income tax. He directed his trustees to appropriate a fund sufficient to satisfy the annuity, & declared that after such appropriation the annuitant should have no right to resort to any part of his estate for the payment of the annuity except the income & capital of the appropriated fund. Upon the death of the annuitant, the capital, if any, remaining of the appropriated fund was given to the School of English Church Music absolutely. There was a deficiency of assets, whereupon the question of abatement arose as between the legatees, the annuitant & the School of English Church Music:—Held: the proper method of abatement was to ascertain the amount of the appropriated fund if the legacy could be paid in full, & the figure thus obtained should abate proportionately with the legacies. The sum, being the abated amount of the appropriated fund, ought to be invested, & the annuitant should be paid her full annuity of £250 per annum free of duty & free of income tax out of the income of this sum, the capital being resorted to in so far as the income was insufficient. The School of English Church Music would be entitled to the capital, if any, of this sum remaining at the death of the annuitant.—Re Nicholson, Chadwyck-Healey v. Crawford, [1938] 3 All E. 4883 IV. ————]—A. by his will directed that certain pecuniary legacies, amounting in all to the sum of £710, should be paid "with & out of the proceeds" of the sale of his investments comprising stocks & shares. The investments realised the sum of £487 0s. 4d. At the date when the will was made they were worth approximately the sum of £481 12s. 6d. There was a further direction that the legacies were to be paid free of all Crown duties. Testator further dealt with the residue of his property item by item. On a summons raising the question whether the balance of the legacies was payable out of the general residue of the estate:—Held: the balance was not payable & as the fund specified by testator for their payment was insufficient to pay them in full, they must abate ratably inter se.—Re Boyd Estate, Boyd v.

5057a. ——.]—A testatrix guaranteed her son's loan account at a bank. She then made a will appointing him one of her exors. & giving him a legacy of £100 & a protected life interest in the income of her residuary estate. She then guaranteed the son's overdraft on his current account. On each occasion the son charged his estate & interest in a public-house to secure such sum as the testatrix might be called upon to pay. The estate of testatrix was about to be called upon to pay a sum of over £5,000. The son after the death of testatrix executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors:—Held: (1) the fact that testatrix required security for the repayment of the debt after the execution of her will showed an intention not to release the debt, & the son was liable to the estate in the amount which would have to be paid to the bank; (2) notwithstanding that the debt or some part might remain unpaid, the trustees of the will were entitled to pay in their discretion such part of the income as they might think necessary for the son's maintenance & support.—Re EISER'S WILL TRUSTS, *FOGG v. 5408a. General rule.—A will made on a printed form contained an appointment of testator's wife as executrix & a direction to pay debts & funeral & testamentary expenses, but no gift or disposition of property to any person:—Held: the executrix took testator's estate as trustee for the persons entitled to the property of an intestate, including herself, as set out in sect. 46 of the Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23). The repeal by that Act of Exors. Act, 1830 (c. 40), has not restored the law in force before the latter Act was passed under which an exor. took property which was undisposed of beneficially.—Re SKEATS, *THAIN v. M. predeceased testator & died on Aug. 14, 1919. Testator died on Dec. 30, 1920, leaving real & personal property, but no heir-at-law or next of kin:—Held: there was in the will an obvious indication of an intention by testator that the exor. was not to take beneficially. In 1918 testatrix, having become through senility unable to manage her affairs, a receiver of her estate was appointed by the Master in Lunacy, who authorised the sale of her motor-car. A part of the purchase-money was applied for her maintenance. She died in 1920, having no horses or carriages, but the receiver still held the balance of the purchase-money. The estate proved insufficient to pay all the legacies in full. On an originating summons taken out by the trustees, asking, among other things, whether the above-named legatees were entitled to the balance of the purchase-money & whether specific legatees were to bear the cost of packing & dispatching the articles specifically bequeathed to them:—Held: (1) the above-mentioned gift included the motor-car & the legatees were entitled to such of the proceeds of the sale thereof as had not been applied by the receiver; (2) the specific legatees must bear the cost of packing & dispatching the several articles bequeathed to them.—Re SIVEWRIGHT, *LAW v. 5513 i. Whether mixed fund primarily liable—Necessity for direction in will for payment out of mixed fund.]—Since the Wills Act a residuary devise must for the purposes of administration be regarded as a specific devise, & in the order of assets for the payment of debts ranks with specific devises & specific bequests. A residuary devise does not lose its right to contribution from specifically bequeathed personality for the payment of debts so far as the general personal estate is insufficient, merely by reason of the facts that it is given together with the general personal estate on trust for conversion & the proceeds of conversion are made a mixed fund for the purposes of disposition, & that the whole estate is subject to a general constructive charge for the payment of debts. To entitle specifically bequeathed personality to be exonerated from such liability by the residuary realty further evidence of testator's intention to that effect is necessary: such as a direction that the debts are to be paid out of the mixed fund, or that the proceeds of conversion are to be regarded as personal estate.—*Re FORSYTH, WYATT v. 5594a. Direction in will for payment of "money secured on mortgage" out of residue—Balance of unpaid purchase-money.]—Testator, who at the date of his will in 1912 was the owner of several freehold properties, one of which was subject to a mtge. & of leasehold & other personal estate, gave & bequeathed all the freehold & leasehold properties of which he might die possessed upon trusts in favour of certain of his grandchildren & great-grandchildren, & the residue of his estate upon trust for sale & conversion; he then directed that his trustees should out of the money thereby produced pay (inter alia) his debts & legacies, & should out of the residue of such money pay & discharge "any sum of money secured on mtge. of any of my freehold properties," & should stand possessed of the residue of such money in trust to divide same as therein mentioned. After the date of his will testator paid off the mtge. & took a reconveyance of the mortgaged property. Shortly before his death, in June & Oct. 1917, testator contracted to purchase certain freehold properties in respect of which he paid deposits, leaving balances of the purchase-money owing to the respective vendors. On Dec. 23, 1917, testator made a final codicil, by which, after revoking the appointment of one of his exors. & bequeathing a legacy, he confirmed his will in all other respects. Testator died on Dec. 26, 1917, without having completed the purchases or paid the balances of the purchase-money, & shortly after his death his exors. completed the purchases & paid the balances of the purchase-money; whereupon the question arose whether, as between the persons claiming under testator's will, those balances ought to be borne by the freehold properties of testator in respect of which same were payable, or ought to be satisfied out of his residuary estate:—Held: (1) inasmuch as a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money differs essentially from a mtge., even in the modern & wider sense of that term, upon the true construction of the will in the absence of any context enlarging the meaning of the term "mtge." the balances of the unpaid purchase-money owing at testator's death were not "sums of money secured on mtge.," & no contrary intention was signified by the direction in the will to pay & discharge such sums out of testator's residuary estate, so as to exclude the operation of 1854 Act, which by virtue of 1867 Act, s. 2, extends to a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money; with the result that the balances in question ought to be borne by & satisfied out of the freehold properties in respect of which same were payable, & the devisees thereof were not entitled to have those balances discharged out of testator's residuary estate; (2) the confirmation of the will by the last codicil thereto, although executed after the mtge. on testator's freehold property had been paid off & after the vendor's lien had arisen, had not the effect of extending the meaning of the words "any sums of money secured on mtge. of any of my freehold & leasehold properties," so as to include the balances of unpaid purchase-money in question.—*Re BEIRNSTEIN, BARNETT v. "Contrary or other intention"—Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 35.]—The provision by testator in his will of a special fund, not being any of the funds mentioned in sect. 35 (2) of the above Act, for payment of his debts operates as the expression of a "contrary or other intention" within the sect., so as to exonerate, as between the different persons claiming through testator, a personalty fund which at testator's death was subject to a mtge. from the primary liability to discharge it; but the fund is only exonerated to the extent that the special fund is available for discharging the mtge. debt, & in so far as it is inadequate, the mortgaged property remains primarily liable.—*Re FEGAN, FEGAN v. 5654a. —. —. To revert to residue on death of legatee.]—By his will, testator bequeathed a legacy of £10,000 to trustees for his daughter A. during her life & after her death directed that the legacy should revert to & be added to his general residuary personal estate & go as the same was bequeathed by his will. Testator then gave his general residuary personal estate to B. Testator devised his estates in certain places to other trustees as a fund for the discharge of his debts, funeral & testamentary expenses & his pecuniary legacies in aid of his personal estate, with power to his trustees, if they thought it expedient or necessary either before or after his residuary personal estate should be exhausted to raise money for those purposes by sale or mortgage & subject thereto upon trust for B., in fee. The personal estate of testator was insufficient for the payment of his debts & legacies, & B. supplied such deficiency, including the annual payments to A. in respect of her legacy. A. survived both testator & B. On the death of B., the question arose whether, as testator's personalty was insufficient for the payments before mentioned, testator intended that the corpus of the legacy should be raised out of the real estate devised to B. for the benefit of B., who was testator's residuary legatee:—Held: the words "revert to & be added to my general residuary estate" in the will, showed that the testator meant the legacy to be restored to the funds from which it was taken; & it was not to be taken from the real estate merely for the purpose of augmenting the personal estate.—*Re SOMERSET (DUKE), THYNNE v. She then gave several legacies, payable out of her own personal estate, & other legacies payable out of an unappointed moiety of her brother's personal estate, after the decease of his widow, & she directed the duty on all the foregoing legacies to be paid out of her personal estate, & if deficient for full payment either of duty or legacies, such deficiency was to be made good out of the real estate, on which she charged same. Testator then gave a legacy of £1,000 upon certain trusts, & finally directed all the rest & residue of his personal estate to go to his wife for life, remainder over. He left personal estate & real estate of considerably greater value. Questions arose in connection with the incidence of certain death duties, whether an annuity & legacies were for that purpose to be treated as payable primarily out of the residuary personalty or out of the realty & personalty in proportion to their values:—Held: the law in force before Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), as regards the primary fund for payment of legacies as between the personal & real estate has not been altered by sect. 34 (3) of clauses 2 & 8 (b) of Part II. of Sched. H. during her life & on her death the income of the whole of the estate to be invested for the benefit of the children of M. & A. on their attaining the age of twenty-one years, & if there should be no children then the whole of the accumulated funds was to be divided between two named charities. Testator died on Mar. 12, 1929. It having been held upon the originating summons that, in consequence of the will having been attested by the husband of E. H., the 75 per cent. share of the income of the residuary estate was undisposed of by the will, until the death of E. H. or the birth of a child to either M. or A., the question then arose whether testator's funeral, testamentary & administration expenses, debts & liabilities other than the estate duty in the will mentioned ought to be paid primarily out of such undisposed of income or out of the corpus of his estate:—Held: (1) the "real & personal" estate of a deceased person made assets for the payment of his debts by Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 32 (1), include the share of income of testator's residuary estate accruing after his death as to which he died intestate; (2) that property "undisposed of by will," made by sect. 34 (3), Sched. I., Part II., para. 1, of that Act the primary fund for payment of the expenses, debts, & liabilities mentioned in that sub-sect. includes a share of future income of residuary estate which lapses by reason of the statutory inability of the legatee to take under the will; (3) upon the proper construction of the will & the sub-sect. there was no provision for payment of the funeral, testamentary, & administration expenses, debts, & liabilities, with the result that those expenses & the debts & liabilities, except the estate duty in the will mentioned, must be paid primarily out of the share of income which lapsed & any other property undisposed of by the will.—*Re TONG, HILTON v. —By his will dated Dec. 2, 1911, a testator devised to his brother C. "all my freehold & copyhold property," & gave all his leasehold property & personal estate & effects, subject to payment of his funeral & testamentary expenses, debts, & legacies upon trust for division amongst his brothers & sisters as therein mentioned. Testator died on Aug. 15, 1928, & was at his death entitled, subject to the effect of the provisions of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), to two equal ninth shares of certain freehold property comprised in his father's residuary estate, & to one equal fourth part of certain freehold minerals purchased by him. He also owned the entirety of certain other freehold property. The residuary gift of personalty lapsed as regards three equal seventh parts owing to the death of two legatees in the testator's lifetime:—Held: testator by directing that his debts should first be paid out of the residue before division amongst the residuary legatees had shown an intention that in regard to the lapsed shares of residue the order of administration prescribed by Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), Sched. I., Part II., should not apply, inasmuch as the net amount of the residue available for distribution could not be ascertained until after the debts had been paid. lapsed shares in exoneration of the other shares.—Re KEMPTHORNE, CHARLES v. KEMPTHORNE, [1930] 1 Ch. 268; 99 L. J. Ch. 107; 142 L. T. 111; 46 T. L. R. 15, C. A.

Its effect is to make the personal estate applicable towards the discharge of testator's funeral, testamentary, & administration expenses, debts, & liabilities payable out of his estate, except death duties imposed on real estate, in priority to testator's real estate which, owing to the death of the devisee thereof in testator's lifetime, was property undisposed of by his will & which, but for the provision in his will, would be primarily liable according to the order of application of assets specified in Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), Sched. After his death a further guarantee for a later debt of the co. to the bank was executed by the three trustees, of which deft. is the survivor. 6053a. Effect of Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 39.—The expression "personal representatives" in the Administration of Estates Act, 1925 (c. 23), s. 39, does not include trustees in the ordinary sense, even when the personal representatives themselves become trustees upon an assent. The introductory words of sect. 39, conferring powers on personal representatives "during a minority of any beneficiary or the subsistence of any life interest, or until the period of distribution arrives," are explained by the fact that under the new law of intestate succession the existence of an infant beneficiary or of a beneficiary, such as a widow, entitled to a life interest only may postpone distribution, & that in these cases sect. 33 places the personal representatives substantially in the position of trustees. The provision in sect. 39 (1) (ii), conferring on personal representatives "all the powers, discretions & duties conferred or imposed by law on trustees holding land upon an effectual trust for sale" does not operate referentially to make Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 28 (2), applicable to pure personality. Accordingly, where under the will of a testator unauthorised investments are retained under a power to postpone conversion, the rule laid down in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth (1802), 7 Ves. 137a, still remains applicable in regard to the income payable to a tenant for life.—Re TROLLOPE'S WILL TRUSTS, PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. TROLLOPE, [1927] 1 Ch. 596; 96 L. Testator gave all his estate whatsoever unto appcts. upon trust for sale & conversion at such time & manner as they should think fit, with power & discretion to postpone sale & conversion & charged the moneys to arise with the legacies bequeathed by his will. Testator's will contained a residuary bequest, investment clause in wide terms, & a power to appcts. to appropriate any part of the estate in its actual condition in satisfaction of any legacy. The principal asset of testator's estate was a sum of nearly a quarter of a million pounds Irish Three per cent. Guaranteed Stock, & the estate was insufficient for payment in full of all the legacies. The Irish stock could not be sold even at a reduced market value of £151,411 & in the interests of the estate it was inexpedient to realise it at once. the directors were empowered to buy it upon such terms & under such stipulation as to guarantee or otherwise as might be agreed upon. The prospectus referred to the memorandum of assocn. & to a certain deed of covenant. By that deed the business was assigned to the co., & all accounts, except such as the directors should require to be reserved & excepted, were to be carried on by the co., & the partners in the business guaranteed that all debts due to the firm & taken over by the co. were good. By a second deed of the same date, not mentioned or disclosed to the shareholders, assets of the firm to the nominal value of £4,213,896 were reserved & excepted, & provisions were made for guaranteeing payment by the partners of the balance which, after a certain period & under certain arrangements, should not be got in on this account. The co. carried on business for some time, & then stopped payment. A bill was filed by the co. against the living directors & the exors. of a deceased director stating these facts, & that the co. had lost £1,500,000 by taking the liabilities of the business, & by the insufficiency of the guarantee, & charged that the directors had been guilty of a breach of duty in buying the business without obtaining the sanction of a general meeting, & in not taking mtgs. on the property of the partners in order to secure the guarantee, but no fraud was charged against the directors:—Held: on demurrer by the exors. of the deceased director, that as regarded any loss beyond the money placed in the directors' hands, the remedy, if any, was at law, by an action of negligence, which would not survive against exors.—*OVEREND, GURNEY & Co. v. D. died, & at the time of his death was under contract with the purchaser of the adjoining house, No. 11, to erect a garden fence for him & to give him a similar right of way to his garden. Pltf. entered No. 10 shortly after the death of D. & a few days later H., a sub-contractor, on the orders of W., the builder of the houses, erected the fence at the back of No. 11 so as to constrict the right of way granted by D. to pltf. Pltf. sued defts., the exors. of D. as exors., & by his amended statement of claim founded his action (a) in breach of covenant, & (b) in nuisance, but it was argued solely as an action of tort. These facts being proved by pltf., defts. called no evidence, & there was no evidence of the contract of D. with W., the builder. The trial judge found that the fence was erected by W. on the instructions of the exors. of D., defts., & gave judgment for pltf.:—Held: the appeal must be dismissed.—*FLOWER v. 6915a. Liability of executor for "wilful default"—What amounts to.—Pltfs. were the two sons of testatrix, entitled in equal shares to her estate undisposed of by her will, including £214 14s. 5d. in the Post Office Savings Bank & £62 4s. in Savings Certificates. Deft., as sole exor. of testatrix, employed to wind up her estate a solr. who, unknown to him, had at one time been suspended from practice, & who obtained from the first pltf. the Post Office Savings Bank deposit book & the Savings Certificates. Deft. heard for the first time of the solr.'s suspension three months later, when the first pltf. told him of it. Under def't.'s written authority, a warrant valued at £62 4s. had been issued in favour of the solr.'s firm, & the first pltf. wrote to def't. objecting to his having taken that course. Later, the first pltf. asked def't. to employ another solr., but def't. did not do so, as the solr. was then promising to settle the matter. Ultimately the solr. absconded, & the sums of £14 14s. 5d. & £62 4s. were not recovered. In an action by pl'tfs. for a declaration that def't. was guilty of a breach of trust in permitting the sums to be retained by the solr., & for payment of them, def't. in his defence relying upon Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 23:—Held: Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 23 (1), authorised def't. in signing the authorities to the solr.'s firm to collect the sums; (2) by virtue of sect. 30 (1) of the Act, trustees are not liable for losses due to the default of "any banker, broker, or other person with whom any trust money or other securities may be deposited" unless the losses are caused by the trustees' own wilful default; (3) an exor. employing an agent to receive moneys belonging to the estate & relying on sect. 23 (1), will not be liable if the money is lost through the agent's misconduct, unless the exor. has himself been guilty of wilful default; (4) def't. was guilty only of an error of judgment which, where losses are due to a solr.'s dishonesty, does not amount to "wilful default" on the part of an exor.—*Re VICKERY, VICKERY v. 74a. ———.]—Applts. were brought before a magistrate in Trinidad under sect. 5 of the French Guiana Extradition Ordinance of Trinidad charged with being fugitive criminals from French Guiana, where there is a penal settlement. At the hearing it was proved that they had each been convicted in France of a specified crime, & had each received a sentence of imprisonment which was unexpired. The magistrate made an entry in his magistrate's book against their names "extradition ordered." He did not, however, make, as he should have done, an order under Extradition Act, 1870 (c. 52), s. 10 (made applicable by sect. 5 of the Ordinance), for committal to await the Governor's warrant for surrender. Instead another magistrate, who had not heard the case, made a detention order under sect. 3 of the Ordinance, which section applies to suspected fugitives. Upon habeas corpus proceedings:—Held: the appellants should be released: (1) because under the terms of the extradition treaty with France they could be extradited only if the crimes of which they had been convicted were committed in French territory, & there was no evidence that that was so, nor was it necessarily involved in the convictions; (2) because sects. 11 & 12 of the local Summary Conviction Offences (Procedure) Ordinance did not make the entry in the magistrate's book equivalent to an order under Extradition Act, 1870 (c. 52), s. 10, & the irregularities with regard to the order signed prevented the detention of applts. from being warranted.—*KOSSEKECHATKO v. ni. —.]—The Commonwealth of Australia having, by passing the Commonwealth Extradition Act, 1903, acted as a central legislature under the Extradition Act, 1870 (Imperial), may be assumed to have power to deal under the external affairs power of the Constitution with the rendition of fugitive offenders. If this is so, the effect of the Commonwealth Constitution Act upon the definition of "legislature" in Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (c. 69), s. 39, is to create an

that part may be indorsed in the United Kingdom by a magistrate of the said police ct. alone, & need not be indorsed both by a magistrate & a Secretary of State.

Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (c. 69), s. 5, provides: "A fugitive when apprehended shall be brought before a magistrate. . . . If . . . such evidence is produced as . . . raises a strong or probable presumption that the fugitive committed the offence mentioned in the warrant . . . the magistrate shall commit the fugitive to prison to await his return":—Held: in requiring, as a condition of committing an alleged fugitive, such evidence as raises "a strong or probable presumption" that he committed the offence, the sect. means such evidence as, if it remained uncontradicted at the trial, would entitle a reasonable jury to convict the alleged fugitive upon it.

Where, in proceedings under this sect., a magistrate has found that the evidence produced before him raises a strong or probable presumption that the alleged fugitive is guilty of the offence & has committed him, & the alleged exception to the definition so that it must now be read as meaning that the expression "legislatures," where there are local legislatures as well as a central legislature, means the central legislature only; but, in respect of the Commonwealth of Australia, means the Parliament of the Commonwealth only when it has exercised its powers to deal with the surrender of fugitive offenders between the Commonwealth & other parts of His Majesty's dominions. The Commonwealth Service & Execution of Process Act, 1901, was not an exercise by the Commonwealth of any overriding powers which the Commonwealth possesses in respect of the subject-matter of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 (c. 69).—Re MUNRO, [1935] N. n ii. — Jurisdiction of States.—For the purposes of the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, Australia is one British possession. But within the several States, State judicial officers have authority under the law of the "possession" & so are competent to act under the provisions of that statute. A New Zealand warrant was brought to Australia & indorsed by a police magistrate for New South Wales under sect. 13 of Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881. Deft. was arrested under the warrant & was brought before a stipendiary magistrate at Sydney, who made an order reciting that he was satisfied, as required by sect. 14 of Fugitive Offenders Act, that the warrant was issued by a person having lawful authority to issue it & directing that the deft. be returned to New Zealand.—Held: the New South Wales magistrate had jurisdiction to order the return of deft. under sect. 14 of Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881.—*McARTHUR v. st. Cancellation of warrant—Jurisdiction of High Court.—Although Extradition Act, 1903, s. 15, empowers the Govt. of India & the local Govt. to stay proceedings taken under chap. III of the Act & to direct any warrant to be cancelled & accused released, this does not oust the jurisdiction of the High Ct. to interfere where action has not been taken under a valid warrant.—*JAIPAL BHAGAT v. sb. Authentication of warrant & depositions.—In proceedings before a magistrate under Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, the endorsed warrant for the apprehension of the fugitive bore the signature of a person who signed as a magistrate; the signature was certified by the Acting British Resident of the locality. A witness before the magistrate gave evidence identifying the signature of the magistrate & of the Resident, & stated that the magistrate was de facto exercising jurisdiction. Depositions put before the magistrate bearing the endorsement "True Copy" were similarly signed, certified, & identified:—Held: both the warrant & the copy of the depositions were duly authenticated as required by Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, ss. 5, 29.—*RE POUNDALL, Ex p. sd. Application of Order in Council—How proved.—Promulgation of an Order in Council may be proved by the production of a copy of the Government Gazette containing the notice of proclamation of the Order in Council. The application of Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881 & 1915, to a Protected State by Order in Council, which is proclaimed in the London Gazette, may be proved as an Act of State by tendering a copy of such Gazette. An Order in Council of the State of Perak made the penal code of the Straits Settlements applicable in Perak "upon the publication thereof in the Gazette." A book containing such Order was in evidence before a magistrate & contained a note that the Order was published in the Perak Government Gazette of a certain date:—Held: this notification afforded prima facie evidence of the due publication of the penal code in the State of Perak since it fell within the terms of N.S.W. The work on the switchboard was being carried out by another co., & at the time of the accident the work had not yet been completed nor had the switchboard been handed over in working order to resp. co. The justices dismissed the charge, on the ground that in the circumstances resp. co. was not the occupier within the meaning of the Act at the time of the accident :—Held : (1) as the object of the switchboard was to control the distribution of extremely powerful electrical energy which came from resp. co.’s power-house, resp. co. was the occupier, within the meaning of the Act, & was therefore guilty of the offence with which it was charged ; (2) as the switchboard in question was not a “machine or implement moved by steam, water or other mechanical power,” within sect. 142 of the Act of 1901, that sect. was of no avail to the resp. co.—*TURNER v. 68a. ———.]—Resps., the occupiers of a factory, provided adequate guards for securely fencing the mill-gearing, & exhibited a notice prohibiting workmen from removing any guard without special instructions. The workmen removed nine guards for the purpose of setting the rollers, & having replaced only eight of the guards, started the rollers. Owing to their neglect, one workman, who slipped & fell, was dragged into the coupling gear & was killed. An information against resps. under 1901 Act, s. 136, for neglecting to observe the provision of sect. 10 (1) (c) that the mill-gearing must be securely fenced, was dismissed, on the grounds that resps. had taken all adequate precautions by providing the necessary guards, & that it was the fault of the workmen that caused the accident:—Held: under sect. 10 it was the duty of resps. not merely to provide guards, but to fence the machinery securely, & as they had not performed this duty, the justices ought to have convicted them.—THOMAS v. BOLTON (THOMAS) & SON, LTD. (1928), 139 L. T. 397; 92 J. P. 147; 44 T. L. R. 640; 26 L. G. R. 459; 28 Cox, C. C. 529, D. C.

68b. ———.]—Resps. were charged with having failed to have certain mill gearing in their factory securely fenced, or in such position or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed or working in their factory, in consequence of which one of their workmen was injured. The mill gearing consisted of a countershaft 12½ ft. from the ground to which a belt was attached, & the workman was injured in replacing the belt. The justices dismissed the charge, holding that the said mill gearing need not be fenced, as it was as safe as it would be if fenced:—Held: as the essential purpose of Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 10 (1) (c), is to provide absolute safety, so far as fencing can provide it, it was clear that the sect. had been contravened, & the offence charged was, therefore, proved.—*FINDLAY v. 68c. ———.]—Pltf., who was sixteen and a half years of age, met with an accident while employed on a circular wood-cutting machine in deft.'s factory, where he had been so employed, on & off, for some seventeen months. At the time of the accident, he was engaged in cutting timber measuring from 3 ins. to 2 ins. in depth, & before he commenced work, the foreman, in accordance with the practice at the factory, adjusted the guard fitted to the saw in the proper position for cutting timber this size, so that the teeth of the saw were covered by the guard, except at the point where the lengths of timber were inserted, where the teeth were of necessity exposed for a few inches. Pltf. was supplied with a push-stick for the purpose of pushing through the length of sized timber, & also for that of detaching the off-cut from the left-hand side of the saw. After inserting a piece of timber, & while detaching the off-cut, the thumb of pltf.'s left hand got caught in the saw at the point of entrance, with the result that his thumb was cut off at the top joint, & that he eventually lost his little finger & the tops of his ring & middle fingers. The accident was caused through pltf. detaching the off-cut with his left hand instead of using the push-stick. Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 10, provides that all dangerous parts of machinery shall be either securely fenced, or be in such a position as to be equally safe to every person working in the factory as they would have been if securely fenced. Reg. 11 of the regulations made under sect. 79 of the Act requires a suitable push-stick to be kept available for use at the bench of every circular saw fed by hand, & reg. 23 (ii) requires every person employed at the machine to use the push-stick provided in compliance with reg. 11:—Held: (1) deft. had committed a breach of his statutory duty under Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 10, in failing to guard the teeth at the point of entrance to the saw, & the duty under that sect. was not altered by the regulations made under sect. 79; (2) pltf. had been guilty of contributory negligence in not complying with his statutory duty under reg. 23 (ii), & deft. must succeed on this ground.—*LEWIS v. such a position or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed or working in the factory as it would have been if it had been securely fenced:—Held: (1) the question whether a part of the machinery was "dangerous" within the Act was one of degree, & the risk involved in the use of the cutter did not reach a degree sufficient to justify that part being classified as "dangerous"; (2) in any event, to secure a conviction, facts must be established to support the second branch of the complaint, & on the facts, the charge was not proven.—*LAUDER v. engaged in greasing the machinery while it was in motion. Resps. had put up a notice in the factory as follows: "Do not put your hands in the machinery while it is in motion. Persons disregard this notice at their own risk." The pinion-wheels, although usually stopped, were occasionally allowed to remain in motion, for the purpose of greasing. The magistrate dismissed the charge, holding that the pinion-wheels were not dangerous parts of the machine unless in motion, when it was not usual for greasing to be done:—Held: as the wheels were dangerous parts of the machinery, they ought to have been securely fenced, despite the fact that greasing was not usually done while the machinery was in motion, as it cannot be assumed that every person will always exercise the necessary care. The offence charged was therefore proved.—CHASTENEY v. NAIRN (MICHAEL) & CO., LTD., [1937] 1 All E. R. 376; 81 Sol. Jo. 238; 35 L. G. R. 195, D. C.

72a. ———.—Resps. were charged with having failed to have certain machinery in their factory securely fenced, which machinery was dangerous to persons employed or working there, in consequence of which one of their workmen was injured. The machinery consisted of an electrically-driven reeling-machine, for the purpose of straightening & polishing steel bars & rods. While the workman was passing steel bars through the reeling-machine, & was endeavouring to pass a long rod, which was bent, through the machine, he was injured. The justices dismissed the charge, holding that the machinery was not dangerous, on the ground that, inter alia, the workman had no cause to put his hand near the gear-wheels, & that the machine had been inspected by H.M. factory inspectors, who did not raise any objection to its construction:—Held: as the purpose of the Act of 1901 is to provide protection against machinery which is dangerous in fact, it was not enough to say that, if the workman had obeyed his instructions, he would not have suffered injury, nor could it be said that burden was shifted by the Act upon the factory inspector. The offence charged was, therefore, proved.—SUTHERLAND v. JAMES MILLS, LTD., EXECUTORS, [1938] 1 All E. R. 283; 36 L. G. R. 167, D. C.

72b. ———.—An infant workgirl lost the ring finger of her right hand by accident arising out of & in the course of her employment. She received compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act for a time, & then accepted £20 in purported settlement on the promise by the employer to re-employ her. No memorandum of this agreement was recorded. She worked at this employment for five years, when, by reason of trade conditions, she was discharged. She then commenced an action against the employer for damages for personal injuries resultant from the employer's alleged breach of statutory duty to fence the machine. The action was tried by a judge alone, who found that the injury had been caused by the employer's breach of statutory duty to fence, & that there was no contributory negligence on the part of pltf. He, however, also found, having regard to the fact that the infant had received employment for five years after her accident under the agreement, that the agreement to accept compensation, though not registered, was for her benefit & therefore binding, with the result that the action was barred by Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925 (c. 84), s. 29, of the Act. The infant appealed:—Held: (1) without deciding whether the agreement was for the infant's benefit or whether further proceedings might be taken under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the action for breach of statutory duty failed because, on the evidence, the machine was not a dangerous machine within Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 10, & therefore there was no duty on the employer to fence it; (2) on the evidence, the accident was caused by the negligence of pltf., which was a complete defence to the action even if such negligence had only been of a contributory character.—*HIGGINS v. When going, as he was entitled to do, to the tool-box, he slipped & his leg was caught & severely injured by a wheel of the machine which was not cased or fenced. No negligence on the part of anyone was alleged. Pltf. claimed that the absence of fencing made the machine a dangerous machine, & claimed damages for breach of statutory duty:—Held: in considering whether machinery is dangerous, it must not be assumed that everybody will always be careful. A part of a machine is dangerous if it is a possible cause of injury to anybody acting in a way in which a human being may be reasonably expected to act in circumstances which may be reasonably expected to occur. In the circumstances the part of the machine complained of was a dangerous one within Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 10.—WALKER v. BLETCHELY FLETTONS, LTD., [1937] 1 All E. R. 170.

in it. An information against defts. charged that, contrary to Factory & Workshop Act, 1901, s. 10 (1) (c), a part of the mill gearing, namely, a line of shafting, was neither securely fenced nor in such a position nor of such construction as to be equally as safe to every person employed or working in the factory as if it had been securely fenced. The justices dismissed the information, but stated a case for the opinion of the K. B. D.:—Held: defts., in failing to fence the line of shafting, had contravened Factory & Workshop Act, 1901, s. 10 (1) (c), & should be convicted.—MINISTRY OF LABOUR FOR NORTHERN IRELAND v. COWDY & SONS, [1939] N. I. 110.—

could only be operated by the workman actuating a safety device with one hand & the operating lever with the other. On the hearing of an information against the occupiers of the factory charging them with an offence against sect. 10 of 1901 Act, the justices held that the machine was "equally safe to every person employed or working in the factory as it would be if it were securely fenced" within sub-sect. (1) (c) of that sect., & they therefore dismissed the information:—Held: the word "safe" in the sub-sect. meant actually safe, not merely reasonably or practically safe, & the justices ought to have convicted resps.—SOWTER v. STEEL BARREL CO., LTD. (1935), 154 L. T. 85; 99 J. P. 379; 33 L. G. R. 376, D. C.

- 76b. — Machinery equally safe fenced or unfenced—Overhead shaft.—Resps. were the occupiers of a factory in which was a machine driven by a pulley fixed on a horizontal shaft, which formed part of the mill gearing. The driving belt slipped off the pulley & an employee of resps. attempted to put it back while the shaft was running & sustained injuries. The shaft & pulley were about thirteen feet from the floor & they were not fenced or guarded. In attempting to put on the belt the workman stood on a beam about seven feet from the floor, & was acting contrary to resps.' instructions. Resps. were summoned for not having the shaft fenced, but the justices, being of opinion that any fence would have been useless owing to the shaft being thirteen feet above the ground, dismissed the case:—Held: the finding of the justices was not equivalent to a finding that the shaft was "in such position or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed or working in the factory as it would be if it were securely fenced," which was the requirement of 1901 Act, s. 10 (1) (c), & there would have been no evidence to support the latter finding.—*ATKINSON v. - 76c. — Fencing removed for examination & lubrication.—Resps. were the occupiers of a factory in which there was a machine the dangerous parts of which were ordinarily protected by a metal guard. In Dec. 1936, the guard was removed to facilitate experiments with bearings of a new type & for the purpose of examination & lubrication. In Feb. 1937, while the guard was still removed, an accident occurred. Resps. were charged with offences under Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), based on the allegation that they were occupiers of a factory containing dangerous machinery which was not securely fenced, contrary to sect. 10 (1) (c) of that Act. Resps. pleaded by way of defence that the dangerous parts of the machine were necessarily exposed for the purposes referred to in sect. 10 (1) (d) of the Act. The justices dismissed the charges:—Held: the exemption in para. (d) of sect. 10 (1) of Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), applied also to para. (c) of that sub-sect., & where it was proved that the fencing of dangerous parts of machinery was removed for any of the purposes set out in para. (d), the occupier of the factory could not be convicted of a breach of para. (c); also the exemption in para. (d) provided no defence where there had been a failure to fence at all.—ATKINSON v. BALDWIN, LTD. (1938), 158 L. T. 279; 102 J. P. 158; 36 L. G. R. 333, D. C.

- 76e. Statutory duty to use guard.—The Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, imposed upon the occupier of a woodworking factory an obligation (Reg. 17) to provide when practicable the cutter of every vertical spindle moulding machine with the most efficient guard, & (Reg. 21) to maintain the guards required by those Regulations in an efficient state, which must be constantly kept in position while the machinery is in motion. The Regulations also imposed a duty upon every person employed on a woodworking machine (Reg. 23) to use & maintain in proper adjustment the guards provided in accordance with the Regulations. In Defts.' woodworking factory there was a spindle moulding machine in which the circular saw was protected by a pair of fences when the machine was being used for grooving a straight piece of wood, but which had to be removed when the machine was being used for grooving curved wood. A factory inspector visited the factory & required defts. to provide a proper guard for curved work. This was done, but the guards had to be constantly changed according as the machine was being used for straight work or for curved work. Defts.' managing director gave an order to pltf., who was working the machine, not to use the guard, because it was a waste of time. In consequence pltf. did not use the guard, with the result that his hand came in contact with the saw & he was injured. Pltf., who was under twenty-one years of age, received certain weekly payments under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925. Subsequently he commenced an action at common law to recover damages for his personal injuries, alleging that defts. had been guilty of a statutory breach of duty in failing to fence the machine. HILBERY, J., held that he could not recover, as he had himself committed a breach of statutory duty imposed upon him by Reg. 23 of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations in failing to use & maintain the guard. On appeal:—Held: there was not a guard provided by the employers within the Reg. 23 of the Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922, & therefore pltf. was not committing a breach of statutory duty in failing to use & maintain a guard provided in accordance with the Regulations. It was true that there was a guard upon the premises near where pltf. was working, but he had been told by his employers not to use it. When pltf. was ordered not to use the guard, it had been taken away, just as much as if it had not been provided at all; further, pltf., being an infant, was not bound by the fact that he had accepted weekly payments under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, as it was more to his benefit to bring an action at common law in order to recover damages for his personal injuries than to make a claim for compensation under the Act of 1925.

Per GREER, L.J.: The case ought also to be decided in favour of pltf. upon the ground that a man cannot take advantage of his own wrong. Defts. were not entitled to take advantage of the order they had given to pltf. not to use the guard, whereby they had prevented him from performing his duty under Reg. 23.—*MURRAY v. 81b. ————.]—Defts. installed in their factory a circular saw, which in breach of a statutory duty was improperly fenced. A workman was injured while testing the machinery of the saw in a manner which was held to be the direct cause of the accident. In an action for damages for personal injuries it was argued on behalf of the workman that, in order to prevent him from obtaining compensation based upon a breach of a statutory duty, there must be contributory negligence on the part of the workman limited to acts done in breach of some order or done outside the ambit of his employment:—Held: the negligence of a workman which would prevent him from obtaining compensation based upon a breach of a statutory duty was negligence of the ordinary kind, & as the workman had been negligent in the present case he could not recover.—*CRAZE v. X. owned a building which was a factory where more than forty persons were employed, & carried on business as a shirt manufacturer in the basement & on the ground & first floors. The second floor was unoccupied. The third & fourth floors were let to Y., who carried on business there as a blouse manufacturer, employing more than forty persons. The factory of X. & that of Y. were respectively worked by separate & distinct electric motors, driven by electricity generated & supplied by the electricity undertaking of a municipal corpn. & each factory had a separate meter. Without this supply of electricity the electric motors could not be driven:—Held: mechanical power, namely, electrical current, was supplied to different parts of the same building within sect. 149 (1). Accordingly, as the building was a tenement factory, etc., the owner, was responsible under sect. 14 (6), (7) of the Act that the means of escape in case of fire provided throughout the factory, including the two floors occupied by Y., should be maintained in good condition & free from obstruction.—*MUMBY v. 138b. — — —.]—A workman in a ship in dock fell through a hatchway of which the fencing had become loose & was injured. He was employed in replacing the insulation on refrigerator pipes, & his employers were in no way connected with either of defts. He sued the stevedores working on the hatch, & the owners, for negligence & breach of their statutory duty to light the ship efficiently & to fence the hatchway while it remained open. The Factory & Workshop, Dangerous & Unhealthy Industries Regulations, 1934, reg. 12, provides that decks where work is being done must be efficiently lighted when "processes," which include unloading, are being carried on. Defts. contended that the "process" was finished when the hatchways had been fenced in accordance with the regulations; & also that pltf., who was not engaged in any of the processes, was not within the benefit of reg. 37, which provides for the fencing of hatchways:—Held: (1) the process of unloading continues until all the hatch covers have been replaced; (2) on the authority of Manchester Ship Canal Co. v. Director of Public Prosecutions, No. 138a, the effect of Docks Regulations, 1925, was to protect any workman employed in the ship even if not employed on any of the processes & the 1934 Regulations did not withdraw this protection.—*HAWKINS v. 138c. — — —.]—Pltf., employed as a labourer, was assisting in the unloading of timber from defts.' ship. Having finished unloading one kind of timber, a different skid was required to unload the next kind. It was suggested to pltf. that a suitable skid was to be found in the after part of the ship & he proceeded there in search of one. In a badly lighted part of the deck space he fell down an open hatch & was injured. It was contended for defts. that there was no invitation to pltf. to go to the part of the ship where the accident happened. Pltf. relied upon a breach of the regulations made under the Factory & Workshops Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 79, namely, that in breach of reg. 12 (c) the deck space was insufficiently lighted & in breach of reg. 37 (a) the hatch was insufficiently fenced. The only fence in the present case was some distance from the hatch & in any event of an insufficient height:—Held: (1) pltf. was an invitee & was entitled to recover; (2) in the above reg. 12 (c) "required to proceed" does not necessarily mean ordered to proceed; but includes any place where a workman might properly go for ropes, slings, skids, etc.; (3) in the above reg. 37 (a) "accessible" means accessible without reasonable let or hindrance & the "fence" is a fence situated in close proximity to a single hatch.—*HENAGHAN v. The hatch covering collapsed & pltf. fell into the hold & were injured. The claim in negligence was barred by the doctrine of common employment, & reliance was placed upon a breach of statutory duty imposed by Docks Regulations, 1934, regs. 36, 38, made under Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22). Reg. 36 requires a deck-stage or cargo-stage to be substantially constructed, & reg. 38 provides that no cargo shall be loaded or unloaded by a fall or sling at any intermediate deck unless either the hatch at that deck is securely fastened or a secure landing platform has been placed across it:—Held: (1) the ct. was bound by the dictum of SCRUTTON,

It could not, therefore, be said that plffs. were guilty of any breach of statutory duty.—HANLON v. PORT OF LIVERPOOL STEVEDORING CO., LTD., [1937] 4 All E. R. 39.

Defective staging—Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931.—Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931, made in respect of the construction & repair of ships in shipbuilding yards provide that it shall be the duty of the occupier to comply with the Regulations, & by Part II., reg. 11 (b), that all staging shall be securely constructed of sound & substantial material & shall be maintained in such condition as to ensure the safety of all persons employed.

Defts. were constructing in their shipbuilding yard a vessel for shipowners, which had been launched & placed for finishing in a wet dock in that yard. For the purposes of their building operations defts. had erected in the lower forehold of the vessel a staging, which they no longer used, though their inspectors still examined it from time to time. The shipowners employed an insulation co. to do certain work in the vessel, & defts. allowed that co. to occupy & use the staging in the course of their work. Owing to a defect in the staging, pltf., an employee of the insulation co., while engaged in their work fell from the staging & was injured. Pltf. brought an action against defts. for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defts., & by their breach of the statutory duty imposed upon them by the Regulations:—Held: the Regulations, as regards their provisions for the security of staging, did not so affect sect. 104 of the Act as for the purposes of the case to render the shipbuilding yard the only possible factory & the shipbuilders the only occupiers, or necessarily to prevent premises forming part thereof from becoming a factory & the occupier of such premises from being the occupier of a factory; the part of the vessel in which the staging was erected constituted a factory within the meaning of the Act & the Regulations, the occupiers of which were not defts. but the insulation co.; defts. were under no duty to maintain the staging; & the action failed & should be dismissed.—*SMITH v. 153a. — "Temporarily used"—Machinery not in actual use.—By Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 79, the Secretary of State may make regulations in respect of dangerous machinery. By sect. 105 the provisions of the Acts with respect (inter alia) to fines in respect of death or injury are applicable as if any premises on which machinery worked by steam, water, or other mechanical power is temporarily used for the purpose of the construction of a building or any structural work in connection with a building were included in the word "factory," & as if the person who by himself, his agents or workmen, temporarily uses any such machinery for the before-mentioned purpose were the occupier of a factory. The Secretary of State, in pursuance of s. 79, made certain regulations casting upon employers of workmen the duty of fencing floor-openings with a suitable guard rail & toe board or other efficient means:—Held: (1) the words "temporarily used" are not confined to the actual moment when the machinery is in use, but extend to the whole period during which the machinery is available for use in the constructional work, & therefore that persons who had brought such machinery upon the premises were liable to conviction as the occupiers of a factory in respect of the death of a workman who fell through an unfenced shaft at a time when the mechanical hoist for which the shaft was made was not in use; (2) the words "employers of workmen" imposed upon sub-contractors, engaged in laying floors in a building in course of erection, liability in respect of the death of one of their workmen who fell through an unguarded well hole which the sub-contractors had left for a staircase in the construction of which the sub-contractors were not concerned.—BARNETT v. CAXTON FLOORS, LTD., BUTLER v. KLEINE PATENT FIRE RESISTING FLOORING SYNDICATE, LTD. (1928), 140 L. T. 138; 93 J. P. 59; 45 T. L. R. 141; 27 L. G. R. 27; 28 Cox, C. C. 558, D. C.

— Electric crane.—By para. 31 of the Building Regulations, 1926, made under Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), which apply to all premises on which machinery worked by steam, water or other mechanical power is temporarily used for the purpose of the construction of a building: "Any part of the premises in which any person is habitually employed shall be covered in such a manner as to protect any person who is working in that part from being struck by any falling material or article."

Pltf., a bricklayer, having been struck while at work on a building under reconstruction by bricks falling from a higher floor & thereby injured, claimed damages for negligence, as having been due to the breach of a statutory regulation—namely, para. 31 set out above. The county ct. judge dismissed the action on the ground that the scaffolding where the accident happened having only been in position for a day & a half, neither pltf. nor any other person was habitually employed there. On appeal:—Held: (1) “mechanical power” includes an electric crane; (2) the regulation assumed that workmen would have to move about from one part of the premises to another & imposed a duty upon the employers to afford protective cover against falling material in all parts of the building where it might be required, for the benefit of any person who might be working there. Pltf. was therefore entitled to recover damages for his injury.—KEARNS v. GEE, WALKER & SLATER, LTD., [1937] 1 K. B. 187; [1936] 3 All E. R. 151; 106 L. J. K. B. 16; 155 L. T. 519; 53 T. L. 180b. — Extensive building site—House on site completed.]—Injuries were sustained by two workmen in the employ of resps., who were contractors engaged in the erection of a number of houses on a large area of unenclosed land. At one point on the building site was a mortar mill driven by a petrol engine, & there was also on the site a concrete mixer on wheels, which was moved about the site as occasion required. In the first case the workman injured himself while working on the roof of a house which had almost been completed. The mortar mill was 100 yds. distant from the house, & was not within its curtilage or precincts. In the second case the accident occurred in a completed house from which the mortar mill was 25 yds. & the concrete mixer about 400 yds. distant; neither of these machines had any connection with the accident. In both cases the workmen were disabled for more than three days, but resps. did not send written notice to the inspector of the district. Informations for failing to give notice were preferred against resps. under the Notice of Accidents Act, 1906 (c. 53), as amended by Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923 (c. 42). The justices dismissed both informations:—Held: (without deciding whether an extensive building site may be a “factory” within Factory & Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 105 (1)), the question of the extent of “premises on which machinery . . . it temporarily used for the purpose of the construction of a building” was one of degree & therefore of fact; & the justices had not misdirected themselves in holding that a house on such a site, when completed, or nearly completed, became a separate set of premises, which could not be deemed to be a “factory” within the Act.—PEASE v. SIMMS (W. J.), SONS & COOKE, LTD., [1932] 1 K. B. 723; 101 L. J. K. B. 805; 146 L. T. 366; 96 J. P. 66; 48 T. L. R. 176; 30 L. G. R. 87, D. C.

180d. Electric wire insufficiently insulated.]—Resps. were charged, as the occupiers of certain premises in the course of construction, with failing to have properly covered with insulating material the lead to a portable electric lamp, & with failing so to place & safeguard that lead as to prevent danger, so far as reasonably practicable, contrary to the Building Regulations, 1926, & that, in consequence of such neglect, a labourer employed by resps. had been killed. The justices dismissed the informations, on the ground that the leads were supplied & intended by resps. for use as a “hanging” cable, & not as a “trailer”; that the leads were of the type usual for such purpose, & had been passed by the local electrician for such purpose; that the leads had been repaired with adhesive tape, where necessary; & that the accident had happened at night when the labourer himself, without authority, fetched the lamp from the boiler house, & instead of hanging it up, trailed it through the wet, & received a fatal shock. The regulations require an electrical conductor to be covered with insulating material where necessary to prevent danger, & to be so placed & safeguarded as to prevent danger where reasonably practicable:—Held: the regulations were imperative, & required the occupiers so to place & protect the wires that there was no danger to any person employed. The facts proved showed a breach of the regulations.—LONG v. KIRK & Co., LTD., [1938] 1 All E. R. 142; 82 Sol. Jo. 256; 36 L. G. R. 153.

Appls. occupied a warehouse for the storage of ice-cream from which on Sunday supplies were given to employees to be sold by each of those employees to members of the public by retail from a movable box-tricycle:—Held: the warehouse was not a shop which was open for the serving of customers on Sunday within sect. 11 (1) of the Act, nor was it a place where retail trade or business was carried on within sect. 13 so that the provisions of the Act extended to it as if it were a shop; the box-tricycle was not a "place" within sect. 13; & therefore, appls. had been wrongly convicted.—*ELDORADO ICE CREAM CO., LTD. v. s1. Exemption—Sale of "medical & surgical appliances"—Contraceptives.]—A shopkeeper sold a rubber contraceptive to a customer after the closing hour. Such contraceptives are used to prevent conception & the communication of disease, & their use is sometimes advised by medical men. On the occasion of the sale the door of the shop was not locked, & entrance could be obtained by any one. A notice was exhibited stating that the shop was closed except for the sale of medical & surgical appliances. An assistant was in attendance to serve customers. The shopkeeper having been convicted of a contravention of Shops (Hours of Closing) Act, 1928 (c. 33), s. 1:—Held: the contraceptive was a medical or surgical appliance within Sched. 1. of the Shops Act; & in order to comply with the provisions of the Act, it was not necessary for the shop to be closed in the physical sense, an intimation that it was open only for the sale of permitted articles being sufficient. One of these customers arrived at the shop at 10.45 a.m., & in her case the operation began at that hour & continued until 2 p.m. The other customer arrived at the shop at 11 a.m., & in her case the operation began at that hour & continued until almost 4 p.m.:—Held: though the customers were served for the periods of time indicated after the hour at which the shop was required to be closed under above sect., yet, inasmuch as they were in the shop & being served before that hour, the cases came within the proviso to sub-sect. 7 of the sect., & the occupier was not guilty of an offence against the Act.—*MOORE v. "Newly-cooked provisions"—Rolls & bread.—On Nov. 3, 1937, after 8 p.m., a customer was served in resp.'s shop with newly baked bread rolls, to be consumed off the premises, & another customer was served with half a loaf of newly baked bread, also to be consumed off the premises. Resp. was charged with having kept the shop open for the serving of customers after the hour of 8 p.m., in contravention of Shops (Hours of Closing) Act, 1928 (c. 33), s. 1. By Sched. I (1) (b) to the said Act, it is provided that customers may be served after the said hour of 8 p.m. with, inter alia, "newly-cooked provisions . . . to be consumed off the premises." The magistrate dismissed the charge, holding that newly baked rolls or newly baked bread could be properly described as "newly-cooked provisions."

Thereupon this appeal was brought:—Held: as it was impossible to exclude newly baked rolls or newly baked bread from the scope of the expression "newly-cooked provisions," within the exemption clause in the Act of 1928, no offence had been committed.—*LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. The nature of his work was to assemble crates, which, when not in use, were kept in bundles, to line them with packing material, to cord them together, to nail on the top, & then either to stencil or to attach the label showing the destination. He also packed cases, which he would have to label after cording them, & cartons. Some of the packing consisted of stitching canvas covers round rolls of material. In Mar. 1920, deft. co. was formed to take over the business of the firm & they continued to employ pltf. as a packer. From Mar. 1920, to Dec. 1925, deft. co. paid pltf. a weekly sum in cash, & they also supplied him with dinner & tea on the premises. The agreed value of the meals so supplied by deft. co. was 10s. per week:—Held: (1) pltf. was a manual worker who had entered into, or had worked under, a contract with the defts., & was, therefore, within the protection of the Truck Acts; (2) defts. had contravened sect. 3 of Truck Act, 1831, by supplying pltf. with meals as part of the remuneration for his labour. Defts. were not protected by sect. 23, as there was no agreement or contract in writing & signed by pltf. authorising any stoppage or deduction from wages for meals, as required by the proviso. The whole scope of the Truck Acts contemplated that deductions should not be made from a man's pay except by his consent, given personally, in circumstances of some formality; (3) pltf. was entitled to recover from defts., under sect. 4, the agreed value of the meals so supplied, as being so much of pltf.'s wages as had not been actually paid to him by defts. in the current coin of the realm; (4) pltf.'s action was for debt on a specialty for work done, & the period of limitation applicable under sect. 3 of Civil Procedure Act, 1833, was twenty years after the cause of action; pltf. was therefore 264c. —.]—Pltf. was a weaver in defts.' employment & his wages were calculated on the amount & kind of cloth woven in each week in accordance with a uniform list of prices agreed between the employer's & workmen's unions. According to the list of prices, pltf. became entitled for the week ending Aug. 1, 1928, after agreed deduction to a sum of £2 5s. 0½d., but defts. only paid him £2 4s. 0½d., claiming the right to deduct 1s. in respect of three yards of cloth woven with a fault rendering them unmerchantable. The evidence showed that it had been the practice of the mill for many years to make deductions for work not done with reasonable care & skill, the deductions not exceeding in amount the loss sustained by the employers & often not being exacted. A similar usage existed in the bulk of the mills carrying on the Lancashire weaving trade, though some of the mill owners were trying to do without deductions:—Held: this practice was not rendered illegal by the Truck Act, 1831 (c. 37), s. 3, as it did not involve a deduction for bad work from ascertained wages, but a deduction for bad work made in calculating the wages.—*SAGAR v. defts., pltf. signed two documents. One was an application to defts. to allot to her a number of shares in deft. co. The other contained (inter alia) a request that "you [the co.] should deduct from my wages each week & allocate towards payment for my shares the following amounts. . . . Similar applications & requests were later made in respect of further shares. For some weeks pltf. received her net wages in coin & an envelope containing the share subscription in coin, which was immediately handed back to defts. Thereafter pltf. was handed only the net amount & a receipt for the deductions made. Pltf. sued to recover the amount of her wages which had been applied in payment of shares. Defts. counterclaimed the amount due in respect of unpaid instalments of shares:—Held: (1) the agreement that deductions should be made from pltf.'s wages was illegal under Truck Acts, & pltf. was entitled to recover the sum claimed, there being no distinction between the two methods employed for the deductions; (2) the agreement to take & pay for shares was not

The employee pleaded guilty; & thereupon the special magistrate dismissed the complaint against the employer, the two complaints, by consent, being heard together. There was no evidence of a statutory defence provided by sect. 83 of Early Closing Act that the employer had used due diligence to enforce the provisions of the Act or that the offence had been committed without the employer's knowledge, consent or connivance. There was, however, in the complaint against the employee an allegation that he had committed the act charged without the employer's knowledge, consent or connivance:—Held: the dismissal of the complaint against the employer was wrong.—

39. Add. Annotation :—Folld. Re Morton, Morton v. Morton, [1932] 1 Ch. 505.

39a. —.]—A family arrangement for the division of an estate entered into in the absence or without the knowledge of one of the parties or persons interested in & affected thereby is not binding on any of the parties unless his concurrence is subsequently obtained.

On the death of W. without having made an effective will, & leaving his five brothers his next of kin, four of them joined with a niece in executing a deed of family arrangement, whereby the niece, who had been living with W. & his wife, who predeceased him, & for whom W. desired to make provision, was to be given an equal one-fifth share with the four brothers. The fifth brother T. was not a party to the deed, as at the date thereof he had not been heard of for over twelve years, & it was uncertain whether he was living or dead. Since the date of the deed the whereabouts of T. had been discovered, & he refused to concur in it :—Held : the arrangement was not binding on any of the parties thereto.—Re MORTON, MORTON v. MORTON, [1932] 1 Ch. 505; 101 L. J. Ch. 269; 146 L. T. 527.

Part II.—Validity and Effect.

86a. —.]—A testator, more than two years prior to his death, transferred to his wife a large sum in bearer bonds by manual delivery. By his will he bequeathed, inter alia, certain legacies to his three sons, one of whom was resp., & the residue of his estate to his wife for life, & after her death to his three sons in equal shares. He appointed his wife an executrix of his will. The estate was insufficient to pay the legacies in full. Subsequently endeavours were made on behalf of the Minister of Finance to obtain payment of death duties on the bonds, on the footing that they formed part of the estate. This contention was based on the fact that the testator had collected & used the interest on the bonds during his lifetime & after the transfer had been made. Ultimately payment of the amount claimed was made by the testator's widow, without prejudice to her ownership of the bonds. Later a deed was executed by her & her three sons, under which she undertook to provide a sum sufficient to pay the additional estate duty (which she had already done) & all pecuniary legacies in full, her sons, on their part, relinquishing any claim against her in relation to the bonds. The deed did not purport to be, nor was it in substance, an agreement by the executors with the beneficiaries. The provisions of the deed were at once carried out. Three years afterwards, resp. instituted proceedings to set aside the deed, on the ground that it constituted a release of the bonds to a person in a fiduciary position, or, alternatively, that, if intended to take effect as a family arrangement, it was an agreement uberrimæ fidei, casting upon the testator's exors. a duty of full disclosure. It was alleged that the exors. had failed to disclose that the bonds had not been the subject of a complete gift by the testator to his wife, & that therefore at his death they formed part of his estate :—Held : the deed was a release by the three sons of a doubtful claim against the mother, & it was a mistake to regard her as a trustee of the bonds for the beneficiaries, even if the gift had not been completed. Her position as an extrix. gave her no advantage in coming to an agreement with her sons, nor did the deed involve a family arrangement tainted with undue influence. Resp. was a merchant of such knowledge, experience & ability that there was no inequality in relation to capacity to contract as between him & his mother, & as there was neither concealment

PART I. SECT. 3.

32 II. —.]—In the usual type of family arrangement, unless any item of property which is admitted by all the parties to belong to one of them is allotted to another there is no "exchange" or other transfer of ownership.

A binding family arrangement of this type can be made orally, & if made orally, no question of registration arises. If such arrangement is followed by a writing containing reference to it, then the question is whether thereby terms of the arrangement have been "reduced to the form of a document," i.e. formally recorded in a document with the purpose that they should be evidenced by that document, & that is a question of fact in each case to be determined upon a consideration of the nature & phraseology of the writing & the circumstances in which & the purpose with which it is written.—RAM GOPAL v. TULSHI RAM (1928), 1 L. R. 51 All. 79.—IND.

the deed; & when the approval of the ct. is sought for such a deed, & when there are infant beneficiaries, there should be evidence before the ct. from which it could properly be inferred that the deed is beneficial to such infants.—Re SNELLING, SNELLING v. HANNA, [1930] N. Z. L. R. 426.—N.Z.

—[.]—Defts., under a statute of 1791, built a toll-bridge in place of an ancient ferry on a public highway, & also approaches which by the Act were to be considered as part & parcel of the bridge. Pltfs., the county council, owned land adjoining one of the approaches & built a school on it. Defts. denied pltfs.' right to free access to the school over the approach :—Held : as the old highway consisted of the approaches to the ferry plus the passage across the river, & the substituted highway consisted of the approaches to the bridge plus the bridge, & as the old approaches were highways to which owners would be entitled to access, the substituted approaches were highways by which adjoining owners had similar rights of access, & defts.' claim was ill-founded.—*YORKSHIRE, EAST RIDING, COUNTY COUNCIL v. 13a. ———— Persons able to cross on foot at low water.—Pltfs. were the owners of a ferry connecting the highway at South Benfleet with the highway at Canvey

Island over a tidal creek which at low water could be traversed on foot & they sought to establish their right to an ancient ferry. They proved that as long as living memory went there had always been at this place a ferry with a uniform rate of charge during the day, though at night a different charge had been made, & at times during the night there had been refusal to carry passengers :—Held : there was evidence from which a presumption ought to be made of a grant in times gone by of a franchise ferry of which pltfs. were not in possession, & though there was evidence of acts which were not permissible by the owner of the ferry, & which were wrongful as between him & the public, such acts were due to ignorance of his rights, & were not sufficient to rebut the evidence of a franchise ferry.—*LAYZELL v. Dorset to a public road leading from Studland to Swanage. By sect. 56 of the Act they were empowered to establish, maintain, work & use a ferry service for passengers, animals, vehicles & goods between the Sandbanks & South Haven Point within Poole Harbour. By sect. 62, passed for the protection of the Poole Harbour Comrs., pltfs. were required to establish or acquire & thereafter continuously work the ferry by means of a vessel propelled by steam on a chain cable system, & by sects. 62, 97, passed for the benefit of certain landowners, they were required to provide from seven o'clock in the forenoon when summer time should be in force & from eight o'clock in the forenoon at all other times of the year until one hour after sunset on every day a minimum hourly service of vessels from each shore. The two sects. contained provisions

PART I. SECT. 1.

9 i. A franchise—Under licence from Crown.—A ferry is a franchise, that no one can erect without a licence from the Crown. It is publici juris, & when a ferry is erected, another cannot be erected without a licence; the Crown has a remedy a quo warranto, enabling Poole Harbour Comrs. & the land-owners respectively to exercise certain powers & rights in case plffs. should cease working the ferry or fail to work it continuously & efficiently. They established a ferry service in accordance with these provisions :—Held : the Act did not confer on plffs. an exclusive right of ferry, & that they were not entitled to an injunction restraining defts., who for many years before the Act had in fact carried passengers between the Sandbanks & South Haven Point without claiming any franchise entitling them to do so, from carrying passengers bicycles & goods across the mouth of Poole Harbour within or near the limits of plffs.' said ferry.—*BOURNEMOUTH-SWANAGE MOTOR ROAD & FERRY CO. v. 71a. Exemption from tolls—Crown.—By a local Act of Parliament private landowners were authorised to establish & maintain a ferry service at Torpoint, Cornwall, across the river Tamar, & to charge tolls for its use. Avoidance of the tolls by the running of any boat service for hire in competition with the ferry was penalised by the Act, but officers & other servants of His Majesty were exempted from this provision, & their vessels were allowed free passage between the points served by the ferry. By another sect. of the Act, the ferry owners & their successors were exempted from the payment of rates & taxes in respect of the ferry. By Ferries (Acquisition by Local Authorities) Act, 1919 (c. 75), deft. council became the owners of the Torpoint ferry. Upon a summons to determine what, if any, officers, men, or other persons in His Majesty's service were entitled to be borne free of charge or toll, by the Torpoint ferry :—Held : the Crown's general prerogative of exemption from the payment of tolls cannot be deemed to have been abandoned by implication, in respect of tolls created by any Act of Parliament, either (a) by reason merely of the specific exemption in such Act of any class of His Majesty's servants from the payment of tolls, nor (b) from the fact that the Crown has foregone or curtailed its rights in any other direction (e.g. that of imposing taxation) elsewhere in such Act.—A.-G. v. Damages claimed by pltf. were for cutting bushes along the bank of the river:—Held: the burden of proof was upon pltf., & the right to fish from the bank of the river involved the right to do such cutting as was necessary for that purpose.—*McKeen v. Pltf. alleged that in the course of defts.' manufacturing operations, & in particular from Sept. 1933, to Jan. 1934, following the beet harvest, large quantities of refuse & effluent were discharged from the factory into the river, & by reason of that he had suffered damage & his fisheries had been prejudicially affected. He claimed an injunction accordingly & damages. At the hearing evidence was also given as to injury to the fisheries between Sept. 1934, & Jan. 1935 :—Held: disturbance of a several fishery is an invasion of a legal right, & in such a case it is not necessary to prove pecuniary loss, but the injury to the legal right carries with it the right to damages; but pltf. had failed to show that the injury to his fisheries had been caused by the acts of defts.—*NICHOLLS v. The owner of the fishing rights over that part of the river affected commenced an action for an injunction & damages against the owners of the gasworks:—Held: it was satisfactorily proved that the effluent from the gasworks was, on each occasion, the cause of the death of the fish, & pltf. was entitled to an injunction & damages.—*GRANBY (MARQUIS) v. sr. Duty to erect grating in tail race of mill—Although banks of adjoining owner affected.—Deft. was fined at petty sessions for failing to erect a grating or lattice across the tail race of his mill at a point where the tail race re-enters the river "F." The river "F." is a river in which there are salmon. For a certain distance before & at the point where the tail race re-enters this river it is bounded on both sides by lands that belong to an adjoining owner, & not to the deft., the owner of the mill. There was no grating or lattice on the tail race where it diverged from or re-entered the river; to construct the grating or lattice, it would be necessary to erect piers that would project into the banks, on the side of the tail race, the property of the adjoining owner. Deft. had started the necessary work of erecting the grating, but had abandoned it in consequence of the objection of the adjoining owner to any trespass on his lands. Deft. had the use of the tail race from the moment it left his own lands until it reached the river :—Held : deft. was under a statutory obligation by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, s. 78, to erect the grating even though it entailed an interference with the banks of the adjoining owner.—*R. sw. Action against Crown servants—Jurisdiction of Exchequer Court.—At Livingstone's Cove, Nova Scotia, is a breakwater owned by the resp., to provide a shelter for boats of shallow draught. In this cove suppliant had set a salmon trap net under licence from the Department of Marine & Fisheries. Dredging operations were being carried on in the vicinity of the breakwater by the Department of Public Works under the supervision & direction of one of its officers. The tug A., hired by resp., whilst moving a loaded scow to the dumping grounds came into contact with suppliant's net, seriously damaging the same. The action was to recover the value, or cost of repairing the net & the loss of the use thereof for about one month :—Held : the master & crew of the tug A., the crew of the scow, & the master & crew of the dredge were servants of the Crown employed upon a public work within sect. 190 of Exchequer Ct. Act, & the ct. had jurisdiction to hear & entertain the action. On the evidence, the net in question was not an interference to navigation within sect. 33 of Fisheries Act, 1927, & the master of the tug A., was negligent in moving the scow as & when he did; suppliant was entitled to damages for the injury caused to his net & damages for the loss of the use of his net.—*MASON v. sz. Order to proceed to nearest port—Onus of proof as to port.—The master of a trawler, who had refused to comply with a direction to proceed to Storno-way given by a British sea fishery officer, was charged with contravening Sea Fisheries Act, 1883 (c. 22), s. 14 (2). Stornoway was not the nearest port to the place where the direction was given, & the prosecutor made no attempt to prove that it was the most convenient port :—Held : the fact that a sea fishery officer directed accused to go to Stornoway raised a strong presumption that Stornoway was the most convenient port within Sea Fisheries Act, 1883, s. 12 (8); it was open to accused to rebut that presumption; & as accused had not been allowed to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on the question of convenience, it was impossible to hold that he ought to have been convicted.—MACKENZIE v. JINKS, [1934] S. C. (J.) 48.—SCOT.

r i. — Grant of licence—Validity of regulations.—Sect. 69A of the Fisheries Act provided, among other things: that, under licence from the Minister a vessel registered as a British ship in Canada & owned by "a Canadian or a Canadian co. with its principal place of business in Canada," is allowed to use an "otter" or other similar trawl. Moreover under this Statute, rules & regulations might be made by Order in Council, & the same were made providing that such licence could be granted only to "Canadian built" vessels, & that after Apr. 1932, none but such would be eligible for licence, & further providing that after Apr. 1, 1930, a licence fee of one cent a pound on the fish caught should be payable. This fee in the case of deft. would amount to between $130,000 to $150,000 a year :—Held : as the regulations ignore the statutory limitation to British ships registered in Canada or owned by a Canadian, etc., & fix as the condition upon which the licence would issue that such ships be Canadian built, & such condition being obviously beyond the scope of the Act, & the delegated powers, such regulations are ultra vires, unenforceable, null & void.—R. v. NATIONAL FISH CO., LTD., [1931] Ex. C. R. 75.—CAN.

sm. Prohibition against use of nets—Accused charged as "master or person in charge"—No evidence that accused on board.—Held : as there was no statutory provision making the master of a vessel liable, as such, for a contravention of the bye-law, & as the bye-law might be contravened by "any person," the prosecutor was bound to prove that the accused was on board the vessel at the time.—*SHIACH v. steam fishing boat, brought an action in the county ct. against deft., who was a member of the crew of the boat, claiming a sum as money lent by them to deft. Deft. alleged in defence that the sum claimed had been paid to him as wages; &, further, that the county ct. had no jurisdiction, the question between the parties being a dispute concerning wages within Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (c. 60), s. 387, which could only be dealt with by a superintendent thereunder. At the trial it was found as a fact that the sum claimed had been lent to deft., & that there was no real dispute concerning wages:—Held: (1) the county ct. had jurisdiction to entertain the action notwithstanding the section, inasmuch as that ct. had all along had jurisdiction to entertain an action for money lent & the section did not either expressly or by implication exclude that jurisdiction; (2) the jurisdiction of the superintendent under the sect. did not arise until a party to the dispute called him to decide it, & here no party had called upon him to do so.—*STURLEY v. h i. ———.]—(1) To justify an entry by a foreign fishing vessel into Canadian territorial waters on the ground of "stress of weather," the weather must be such as to produce in the mind of a reasonably competent & skilful master, possessing courage & firmness, a well grounded bona fide apprehension that if he remains outside such waters he will put in jeopardy his vessel & cargo. In each case the questions whether the master fairly & honestly on reasonable ground believed it necessary to take shelter, & whether he exercised reasonable skill, competence & courage in the circumstances, are questions of fact for the tribunal whose duty it is to find the facts.

(2) The Convention of Oct. 20, 1818, between Great Britain & the United States, respecting fisheries & boundary lines, did not apply to the Pacific waters so far as fisheries were concerned, & therefore could not be available as justification for the entry in question.—THE MAY v. R., [1931] S. C. R. 374; 3 D. L. R. 15.—CAN.

h ii. ———.]—(1) To justify, as against incurrance of penalty under the Customs & Fisheries Protection Act, R. S. C., 1927, s. 10, a foreign fishing vessel entering Canadian territorial waters on the ground of "stress of weather," there must be such a condition of atmosphere & sea as would produce in the mind of a reasonably competent & skilful master, possessing courage & firmness, a well grounded bona fide apprehension that if he remains outside such waters he will put in jeopardy his vessel & cargo. A want of bona fides would abrogate any right or privilege to shelter given by the statute. Further, weaknesses in a vessel may be such, as instanced in certain respects in the present case, as, e.g., glass of inadequate thickness in pilot house windows a small height from the sea, constituting a special danger from waves, that any distress arising from them should be deemed a distress created by the owner or master himself.

(2) The Convention of Oct. 20, 1818, between Great Britain & the United States, respecting fisheries & boundary lines, has no application to Canadian territorial waters on the Pacific Coast, so far as fisheries are concerned. Even if it had, deft. vessels could claim no privilege under it, as the only permission to take shelter in Canadian waters given by the proviso to art. 1 thereof is permission to enter "bays or harbours," & the place where they were seized was not shown to be a bay or harbour.—THE QUEEN CITY v. S. was shortly afterwards seized for an infraction of sect. 10 (c) of Customs & Fisheries Protection Act:—Held: though an American vessel may, under Fisheries Treaty, 1818, enter a Canadian port for the purpose of making repairs therein, this did not render lawful the act of her master in purchasing ice as aforesaid, contrary to the provision of Customs & Fisheries Act, & the vessel was lawfully seized & forfeited.—*R. v. The district justice's conviction on this summons did not order the forfeiture of the net. It was the same net the forfeiture of which was ordered by the justice in the other conviction:—Held: the conviction was bad for not ordering the forfeiture of the net, notwithstanding the fact that its forfeiture was ordered by the other conviction.—*THE STATE (O'SULLIVAN) v. a i. Liability of master.]—At the trial upon a summary complaint, which set forth that the accused, being the master or person in charge of the motor boat Ruby, INS 422, had contravened Byelaw No. 17 made under the Sea Fisheries Act, 1883, it was proved that after having been engaged in fl trawling, the Ruby returned to anchorage, & the accused, who subsequently admitted that he was the master, was found by the fishery officers on the pier near his boat. It was not, however, proved that he had been on board while illegal fishing was taking place. A conviction followed:—Held: Sea Fisheries Act, 1883, s. 20 (1), made the master or the person for the time being in charge vicariously liable for any contravention of the Act which might be committed by a person on board the vessel, unless he was able to bring himself within the proviso to sect. 20 (1); &, on the evidence, the sheriff-substitute was entitled to convict, notwithstanding that the accused was not proved to have been on board when the offence was committed.—*SMITH v. Appls. gave an order for drugs on an order form specifying that the goods were ordered on the condition that the suppliers warranted them to be of the nature, substance & quality described in the order. The suppliers placed their initials on the order form & in due course delivered the goods, retaining the order form in their own possession:—Held: the initialled order form was a written warranty within sect. 29 (1),

Previous analysis before proceedings against retailer.]—An inspector appointed under the Sale of Food & Drugs Acts bought a sample of ground ginger from a retail shop. He complied with the provisions of Food & Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (c. 31), s. 18, with regard to the division of the sample into three parts, delivering one part to the seller

& having an analysis made. Upon analysis the ground ginger was found to contain an added preservative, contrary to the provisions of the Public Health (Preservatives, etc., in Food) Regulations, 1925. The retailer was convicted upon an information charging him with the sale of the ground ginger to the prejudice of the purchaser under Food & Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928 (c. 31), s. 2. Subsequently, proceedings were commenced against the previous seller of the ground ginger for wilfully neglecting to obey the Public Health (Preservatives, etc., in Food) Regulations, 1925, by selling the ground ginger to the retailer. No further sample was taken of the ground ginger & no further analysis made. No part of the sample that was taken in the first instance was sent to the previous seller of the ground ginger. The magistrate refused to convict on the ground that the provisions of sect. 18 of 1928 Act had not been complied with:—Held: the magistrate was wrong in holding that compliance with the formalities prescribed by sect. 18 of 1928 Act was a condition precedent to the institution of proceedings against the previous seller for a sale to which art. 7 of the Regulations of 1925 applied. When the formalities prescribed by sect. 18 of 1928 Act with regard to taking of sample, division & analysis had been complied with in proceedings as between the purchaser & the retailer, there was no necessity for those formalities to be repeated when proceedings were subsequently taken against the previous seller under art. 7 of the Regulations of 1925.—*TWYNHAM v. Onus of proof.]—Resps. were charged with being in possession of certain tuberculous meat contrary to Public Health Act, 1875, s. 117, as extended by Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, s. 28. By sect. 116 of the Act of 1875 the onus of proof that the said meat was not exposed or deposited for sale, or was not intended for the food of man, is placed upon the party charged. Resps. led evidence in order to discharge the onus on them under sect. 116, & the magistrates found that that evidence "was very probably true," & that, as they were not satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the meat was on the premises for the purpose alleged, resps. were entitled to the benefit of the doubt. They accordingly dismissed the charge:—Held: the onus of proof imposed by sect. 116 of the Act of 1875 had not been discharged by resps., & the offence with which they were charged was therefore proved.—*CANT v. 414a. Exposure for sale—What amounts to.]—A baker was delivering bread from an open car; after completing his round, while he was on his way back to the bakehouse, he was stopped by an inspector, who weighed the remaining loaves & found a deficiency:—Held: there was both an offering & an exposure for sale of the bread left in the car, since, when the journey started, it was uncertain which, if any, loaves would remain unsold, & they were taken for the purpose of being sold if customers required them.—KEATING v. HORWOOD (1926), 135 L. T. 29; 90 J. P. 141; 42 T. L. R. 472; 24 L. G. R. 362; 28 Cox, C. C. 198, D. C.

439a. Protection of employer under Sale of Food (Weights & Measures) Act, 1926 (c. 63)—When applicable.]—(1) Held: the language of Sale of Food (Weights & Measures) Act, 1926 (c. 63), s. 12 (2), has no relation & does not apply to a case where a defect of deft.'s machinery or a default of an employee under deft.'s control is the cause of the deficiency. This sub-sect. deals with the case where the deficiency is due to a bond fide mistake or accident or other causes beyond deft.'s control, that is to say, not with negligence or other conduct of deft.'s servants or other persons under his control. In such a case deft. may avail himself of the provisions of sect. 12 (5) if he satisfies the provisions of that sub-sect., by having any other person, including an employee, whom he charges as the actual offender, brought before the ct.

(2) On the question whether proceedings against defts. for contravening this sub-sect. were "proceedings under this Act in respect of an alleged deficiency of weight" within sect. 12 (2), whilst LORD HEWART, C.J., did not express a decided opinion, one way or the other, AVORY, J., expressed the view that proceedings under sect. 6 (2) of the Act were in respect of an alleged deficiency of weight, & TALBOT, J., expressed an opinion to the contrary.

(3) On proceedings against bakers under sect. 6 (2) of the Act defts. duly laid an information against one of their employees under sect. 12 (5); having him brought before the ct. as the actual offender & tendering evidence in order to prove that they had used due diligence to enforce the execution of the Act, & that their employee had committed the offence without their consent, connivance, or wilful default. At petty sessions, the information against the employee was dismissed, but defts. were convicted. Defts. appealed to Quarter Sessions:—Held: the Ct. of Quarter Sessions had no power to exempt defts. from any penalty under sect. 12 (5) on the ground (per LORD HEWART, C.J., & TALBOT, J.) that having regard to the fact that the employee had been acquitted at petty sessions, it was not open to defts. to contend at Quarter Sessions that the employee was wrongly acquitted, & on the ground (per AVORY, J.) that in any case on the facts the employee charged was not the actual offender within the sub-sect.—WALKLING, LTD. v. ROBINSON (1930), 99 L. J. K. B. 171; 143 L. T. 105, 106; 94 J. P. 73; 46 T. L. R. 151; 28 L. G. R. 88; (1929), 29 Cox, C. C. 131.

439b. Exercise of due diligence by employer—Question of fact.]—(1) Where an employer who is charged with an offence against the Sale of Food (Weights & Measures) Act, 1926 (c. 63), brings another person before the ct. under sect. 12 (5), as being the actual offender, the question whether the employer has used due diligence to enforce the execution of the Act is one of fact & not of law. (2) The result of compliance with sect. 12 (5) is that both the employer & the other person are convicted, but that the latter alone is liable to any penalty. (3) Qu.: whether in a case where the justices have convicted the employer & have refused to convict the actual offender, the employer may not appeal to quarter sessions. Walkling, Ltd. v. Robinson, No. 439a, is no authority to the contrary, since in that case the employee was found as a fact not to be the actual offender, & an appeal would have involved the allegation that he was wrongly acquitted.—HAMMETT (R. C.), LTD. v. CRABB, HAMMETT (R. C.), LTD. v. BELDAM (1931), 145 L. T. 638; 95 J. P. 180; 47 T. L. R. 623; 29 L. G. R. 515; 29 Cox, C. C. 364, D. C.

439c. — Failure of branch manager to exercise due diligence.]—Applts., a co. owning a large number of butchers' shops, were charged with an offence at one of their shops under Sale of Food (Weights & Measures) Act, 1926 (c. 63), s. 5 (2). They brought before the ct. as the actual offender one P., a salesman employed at the shop. Applts. were convicted, & the summons against P. was dismissed. On appeal quarter sessions found that B., the manager of the branch, had not exercised due diligence to enforce the execution of the Act, but that in all other respects applts. had exercised due diligence. They held that the manager's failure was the failure of applts., & dismissed the appeal:—Held: quarter sessions were entitled so to hold.

PART V. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 3.

*al. Exposure of several loaves—Whether separate offences.]—*Sale of Food (Weights & Measures) Act, 1926, s. 3, enacts that "a person shall not . . . in exposing or offering any article of food for sale, make any misrepresentation . . . or commit any other act calculated to mislead the purchaser or prospective purchaser, as to the weight or measure of the article." Sect. 11 (3) renders a person contravening sect. 3 liable to a fine "not exceeding in the case of a first offence five pounds":—Held: in the case of a first offence, a shopkeeper, who had exposed for sale at the same place & time twenty-five loaves deficient in weight, had committed not one, but twenty-five offences, for each of which he could be penalised, & accordingly, a penalty of £25 imposed by the magistrate was within his powers. Semble: in the circumstances, each of the offences would fall to be regarded as a first offence.—*MONTROSE CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY v. 439j. Comparison with other loaves—Reasonable number to be weighed.]—Two informations under Sale of Food (Weights & Measures) Act, 1926 (c. 63), s. 6 (2), were preferred against defts. (i.) for having in their possession for sale thirty-seven loaves of bread, the net weight of each loaf not being one pound or an integral number of pounds; (ii.) for selling a loaf of bread the net weight of which was not one pound or an integral number of pounds. Under the supervision of an inspector of weights & measures fifty-six loaves, purporting to be 2-lb. loaves, were taken from a considerably larger number in a cart from which defts.' vanman was delivering bread, & weighed. Nineteen proved to be either of correct weight or of a weight in excess of 2 lb., but thirty-seven were deficient in weight, & in the case of one loaf the deficiency amounted to 2 ozs. 4 drams. That loaf was purchased by the inspector. The justices dismissed both informations, on the ground that defts. were in each case protected by sect. 12 (1).—Held: on the first charge, with respect to each of the thirty-seven loaves, the justices were entitled to look at the average weight of a number of other loaves offered for the sale on the same occasion, but it was not possible for them to hold that thirty-six was not a reasonable number; but on the second charge, the variation from the proper weight in the case of the single article being clearly considerable, they ought not to have had regard to the average weight of other loaves sold, as that inquiry arose only where the variation was inconsiderable.—CAVE v. DUDLEY CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY (1934), 103 L. J. K. B. 569; 151 L. T. 448; 98 J. P. 265; 30 Cox, C. C. 151; 32 L. G. R. 515, D. C.

445a. Deficiency in weight—Sale of Food (Weights & Measures) Act, 1926 (c. 63), s. 4—Pre-packed butter—Material time of making up.]—Resps. had in their possession for sale pre-packed packages of butter purporting to be in the quantities prescribed by Sale of Food (Weights & Measures) Act, 1926 (c. 63), s. 4 (2) (a), namely, in multiples of a quarter of a pound, which, however, when weighed by appts.' food inspector, were deficient in weight. It was contended that as the packages were correct in weight at the time of making up, four days earlier, they were "made up for sale" in the prescribed quantities, & that the offence of having in their possession for sale pre-packed articles of food not being made up in the quantities prescribed by the above sub-sect., had not been committed.—Held: "made up for sale" does not refer to the moment of making up only but to the moment of having in possession for sale, & resps. were guilty of the offence charged.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. ROYAL ARSENAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD., [1936] 1 K. B. 154; 105 L. J. K. B. 58; 154 L. T. 214; 100 J. P. 25; 52 T. L. R. 98; 80 Sol. Jo. 77; 34 L. G. R. 42; 30 Cox, C. C. 318, D. C.

not been approved; & conviction quashed.—SOMERVILLE & BARR, LTD. v. CHALMERS, [1925] S. C. (J.) 70.—SCOT.

PART V. SECT. 4, SUB-SECT. 1.

m 1. — — — — — Relating to property in milk vessels.]—A dairyman, charged with contravening art. 12 of Milk & Dairies (Scotland) Order, 1925, maintained that the article was ultra vires of the Board, in respect that the Board was empowered to make Orders only for the purpose of ensuring the purity of milk, whereas the purpose of art. 12 was, not to ensure purity of milk, but to preserve the rights of property in milk vessels. It was stated for the complainant that the Board regarded the article as in the interests of public health, since it assisted the tracing of sources of infection.—Held: although art. 12 prima facie appeared to be ultra vires as being directed solely to preserving rights of property in milk vessels, yet, since it was possible that further information might show that it did tend to ensure the purity of milk, the ct. could not decide, in these proceedings & on the information before it, that the article was ultra vires.—SOMERVILLE v. 476a. — Necessity for registration in every district where business carried on.—A person carrying on business as purveyor of milk must be registered under art. 6 of the Milk & Dairies Order, 1926, with the sanitary authority of each district in which he carries on business. It is not sufficient that he is registered with the sanitary authority of the district where his cowsheds & dairy are situated if he also carries on business in other districts where he has a regular milk round.—EASINGTON RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. GILSON (1929), 142 L. T. 429; 94 J. P. 56; 46 T. L. R. 107; 28 L. G. R. 49; 29 Cox, C. C. 86.

476b. Change of tenancy—Removal of predecessor from register—Whether new tenant "person aggrieved."—On May 1, 1930, applt. succeeded a predecessor as annual tenant of premises used as a dairy. On May 12, 1930, resps., who were the local authority, having in the meantime given a similar notice to his predecessor, gave to applt. a notice purporting to be given under Milk & Dairies (Amendment) Act, 1922 (c. 54), s. 2 (1), calling upon him to show cause why they should not remove his predecessor from the register of purveyors of milk in respect of the premises on the ground that they were satisfied that by default of the latter the premises were not in a fit condition for the purposes of a dairy. On May 13, 1930, resps., after hearing applt., decided to remove his predecessor from the register on that ground, & thereupon gave applt. notice that they had so decided. An appeal by applt. under the above subsect. against the decision of resps. was dismissed by the magistrate on the ground that applt. was not a "person aggrieved" by the decision within the sub-sect. On an appeal from the magistrate by case stated:—Held: applt. was a "person aggrieved" within the sub-sect., & the case should be remitted to the magistrate to be heard by him on the merits.—*PROSSER v. 476c. Artificial Cream Act, 1929 (c. 32)—Application.—Appls. were convicted on informations preferred against them under Artificial Cream Act, 1929 (c. 32), in respect of the sale by them of certain confectionery, described as "cream filled Swiss rolls" & "vanilla cream sandwich," containing a cream-like paste or substance, which was not cream as defined in Artificial Cream Act, 1929 (c. 32):—Held: the Act applies only to the sale of cream or artificial cream as a separate article of food, & has no application to confectionery or to a composite substance in connection with confectionery. It applies only to a substance purporting to be cream & not to a substance purporting to contain cream.—LYONS (J.) & Co., LTD. v. KEATING, [1931]

476d. Breach of Milk & Dairies (Amendment) Act, 1922 (c. 54), s. 3 (1) (b)—Offence by licence holders.—Milk & Dairies (Amendment) Act, 1922 (c. 54), s. 3 (1) (b), which prohibits the use, except under licence from the Minister of Health or with his authority, in connection with the sale of milk, of certain prescribed designations, is not limited in its application to acts committed by persons who do not hold licences.

On a charge of an offence under this sect. the question of sale to the prejudice of the purchaser does not arise.—PRATT v. LLOYD (1932), 148 L. T. 137; 96 J. P. 479; 49 T. L. R. 14; 30 L. G. R. 505; 29 Cox, C. C. 569, D. C.

476e. Sale of pasteurised milk at several shops in area—Necessity for licence for each shop.—Milk (Special Designations) Order, 1923, made by the Minister of Health under Milk & Dairies (Amendment) Act, 1922 (c. 54), which provides for the grant of licences to sell milk under special designations, including pasteurised milk, in Sched. IV., sets out the following table of fees payable for licences: "Licence in respect of the establishment in which the process of pasteurising is carried on, & of any shop or other premises in the area of the same, licensing authority from which the milk is sold—£1 1s." "Licence in respect of any other shop or other premises at or from which the milk is sold—5s." Pltfs., who carried on the sale of pasteurised milk at fourteen establishments in the area of the same licensing authority, claimed against the licensing authority a declaration that on the true construction of the above Order they were entitled to receive from the authority, on payment of the sum of 5s., a licence for the sale of pasteurised milk within the area:—Held: on the construction of the Order, a dealer's licence at a fee of 5s. must be obtained for each shop or premises at which the pasteurised milk is to be sold. The local authority is not authorised by the Order to grant a dealer in return for payment of one sum of 5s. a licence to sell at & from as many places as he may choose within the area.

Semble: if a preliminary objection had been taken in limine to the action on the grounds that a person aggrieved by the Order is confined, as regards his remedy, to an appeal to the Minister of Health under clause 9 (2) of the Order, & that the Minister of Health was not a party to the action, that objection would have succeeded, & the action would not have been maintainable.—*UNITED DAIRIES (LONDON), LTD. v. 476i. — Registered producer having not more than four milch cows.]—The Milk Marketing Scheme, which has statutory force under the Milk Marketing Scheme (Approval) Order, 1933, empowers the Milk Marketing Board to impose fines on registered producers who sell milk under contracts not in the form prescribed in the Scheme. The Scheme further provides by para. 38 that the Board shall keep a register of producers, & by para. 40 (a) that producers who have in their possession not more than four milch cows, & who do not sell by retail shall be exempt from registration. By para. 41, the Board, on being satisfied that a person who is registered has ceased to be a producer or is exempt from registration, shall remove his name from the register, provided that the name of a person shall not, by reason only that he is exempt from registration, be removed from the register without his consent.

Deft., a farmer, was registered as a producer in 1933, at which time he possessed six milch cows. Later in that year he disposed of two of them, & thereafter never had in his possession more than four milch cows. In 1934 he entered into a contract for the sale of milk, not by retail, which contract was not in the prescribed form:—Held: the Board had power to impose a fine on deft., notwithstanding that at the date of the alleged offence he possessed not more than four milch cows, since he remained a registered producer until his name was removed from the register with his consent.—MILK MARKETING BOARD v. WILLIAMS (1935), 153 L. T. 115; 79 Sol. Jo. 363, C. A.

476j. — Right to recover costs of operating scheme—What amounts to.]—Applt. was liable as a registered producer & retailer of milk to contribute to the costs of operating the scheme contained in the Scottish Milk Marketing Scheme (Approval) Order, 1933, made under & in terms of Agricultural Marketing Act, 1931 (c. 42), s. 1 (8), & administered by resps. Under the scheme, which came into operation on Dec. 1, 1933, resps. fixed a price for the sale of milk & realised the unmarketable surplus of milk by selling it in a cheaper market. In computing the costs of operating the scheme resps. included as a cost of operation the difference between the lower price received by them for the surplus milk & the price in the liquid market, upon which basis resps. sought to recover rateably from all registered members of the scheme, including applt., a charge or levy calculated at so much per gallon of milk disposed of by each member. Applt., when called upon to pay this charge or levy for each of the months of Dec. 1933, to July, 1934, inclusive, declined to do so, & without disputing the arithmetical correctness of the sum claimed, contended that resps. had wrongly & illegally included in their computation of costs the amount of the alleged loss relating to the said sale of surplus milk, & that, as their method of computation & disposal of contributions provided a benefit to ordinary producers to the detriment of producers & retailers, they had acted ultra vires & contrary to the provisions of the scheme. Resps. basis of computation was in accordance with a previous decision of the Second Division of the Ct. of Session in a recent special case to which applt. was not a party:—Held: the difference between the lower price received by resps. & the price in the liquid market was not a "cost" of operating the scheme; & the contributions claimed from applt. being unauthorised by the scheme, resps. had acted ultra vires in

476g ii. — Power to restrain sale to unapproved customers.]—An interim interdict will be granted to restrain a producer from selling to unapproved customers, although he claims to do so in virtue of a wholesaler's licence, if the administration of the Board's scheme is interfered with.—SCOTTISH MILK MARKETING BOARD v. sv. — Charge of levy by agent association—Validity.]—Deft. assoc. was appointed an agency of a marketing board set up under Natural Products Marketing (British Columbia) Act, 1934, to control the marketing of milk. Pltf., a dairyman, who before the establishment of the marketing scheme had been selling his milk to G.'s dairy, continued to ship his milk to it, but instead of receiving payment from G., cheques with accompanying statements were sent him by deft., who deducted from the price certain charges, including one termed an equalisation levy which arose out of the operation of a milk pool by deft.:—Held: since the pool was operated by deft., not as an agency of the marketing board, but as an assoc., & deft. was not a member of the assoc., deft. was not authorised to charge pltf. with said levy.—BROOKE v. st. Place of delivery—How determined.]—A farmer was charged with selling defective milk. He was a registered producer under the Scottish Milk Marketing Scheme, & at the time of the alleged offence his milk was being consigned, on the instructions of the Milk Marketing Board, to a creamery. The milk was conveyed to the creamery by a haulier who had been licensed by the Board in terms of the Scheme, & the charge against the farmer was founded upon a sample which had been taken on the arrival at the creamery of the haulier's lorry. The sheriff-substitute having found the accused not guilty, on the ground that the sample had not been taken at the place of delivery, according to Food & Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928:—Held: the Scottish Milk Marketing Scheme provided no assistance in determining the place of delivery; in the circumstances the place of delivery must, as enacted by the Sale of Goods Act, s. 29, be taken to be the producer's premises, & accordingly, the sheriff-substitute was entitled to acquit the accused of the charge.—PATERSON v. 476k. — Construction of order.]—The Milk Marketing Board had statutory power to fix the prices for milk by reference to the different purposes for which the producers sold the milk. It fixed a price for milk manufactured into fresh cream, tinned cream, & milk manufactured into other products. It did not fix any price for sterilised cream as such, nor for bottled cream. Milk was sold to be manufactured into sterilised cream in bottles, & a dispute arose as to the price applicable:—Held: the term “tinned cream” included only cream which had been sterilised & put in tins, & did not include sterilised cream in bottles. The price applicable was, therefore, that for “milk manufactured into other products.”—DRIED MILK PRODUCTS, LTD. v. MILK MARKETING BOARD, [1938] 2 All E. R. 534; 54 T. L. R. 630; 82 Sol. 476l. — Explanatory leaflet—Whether warranty.]—The Milk Marketing Board was established under the Agricultural Marketing Act, 1931 (c. 42), s. 6, & regulated by a scheme which was one of the Statutory Rules & Orders. The Board also issued an explanatory leaflet which contained (inter alia) the following: “In various parts of the country at the present time the producer-retailer is feeling the pinch of severe undercutting, & the stabilisation of the industry which will result from the operation of the scheme will end all his anxiety under this head since undercutting will be impossible.” In an action to enforce certain levies under the scheme deft. set up that the above passage was a representation that undercutting would be stopped by the operation of the scheme & that the Board had failed to stop undercutting. He set this up as a defence upon the footing that the above statement was a warranty or agreement, & also as the basis of a counterclaim claiming damages for breach of duty:—Held: (1) if the passage amounted to a representation at all, it applied wholly to the future, & there was no representation as to any present fact that could be relied upon in law; (2) there was no duty upon the Board to stop undercutting; (3) upon the facts the Board had taken all reasonable steps to prevent undercutting.—*MILK MARKETING BOARD v. The alleged deficiency in fat was established, but it was also proved that the milk had not been tampered with in any way, the deficiency being due to the milk having stood for some time in the can, & to the sample having been drawn from a tap at the bottom after the cream had risen. No evidence was led as to the possibility or impossibility of redistributing the constituents of the milk in the can by stirring or otherwise:

476n. Sale of infected milk—No mens rea—Liability in damages.]—S. arranged with defts., who were large distributors of milk, to supply him, his family & household with milk. In Aug. a serious outbreak of typhoid fever occurred. S.’s wife, two children, his niece & governess contracted the disease, & S. himself, though escaping typhoid, was incapacitated for some little time through inoculation. Before they commenced to supply S., defts. wrote asking him to deal with them, & enclosed a brochure describing the way in which they carried on their business, & in particular the care taken to insure a pure supply of milk, which was stated to be mainly produced on their own farm. It was proved at the trial that, during the summer season, they drew the greater part of their supplies from a large number of other farms, most of the milk being mixed together, at the defts.’ distributing depot, before being delivered to customers. For the purpose of the trial, it was admitted that the infection was carried in the milk supplied by defts. Pltfs. founded their actions not only upon negligence, but also upon the breach of the statutory duty imposed by Food & Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928, s. 2, which requires sellers of food to supply food of the nature, substance & quality demanded:—Held: (1) defts. were not guilty of negligence at common law; (2) though defts. had no means of knowing that the milk was infected, there had been a breach of the statutory duty under Food & Drugs (Adulteration) Act, 1928, s. 2, for which they were liable in damages.—*SQUARE v. of deft.'s milk taken by an Inspector of Food & Drugs when the milk was in the course of delivery to the creamery was found on analysis to be inferior to the standard prescribed by regs. 1 & 2 of Sale of Milk (Ir.) p i. ———.—The social relationship between donor & donee, the former a man of 83 years whose mental powers were greatly weakened, added to the facts that he had made the donee his financial agent with respect to a certain transaction, & reposed much confidence in him, was held to raise the presumption of undue influence.—Re MCPHERSON, TRUSTS & GUARANTEE CO., LTD. v. BRADFORD, [1930] 3 W. W. R. 368; 4 D. L. R. 915; affd., [1930] 3 D. L. R. 378.—CAN.

p ii. ———.—Pltf., an aged, ignorant, & worn man, transferred his land to his son, deft., the only consideration to pltf. being a lease for 30 years, in consideration of one dollar, of a small house & garden, part of the land conveyed, and an agreement to supply pltf. periodically with certain provisions:—Held: the transaction should be set aside on the ground that it was an improvident transaction made practically without consideration & without advice, in favour of a person who had a duty at least to see that the transaction went no further than was actually necessary.—HRNYK v. HRNYK, [1932] 1 W. W. R. 82; 1 D. L. R. 672; 40 Man. L. R. 173.—CAN.

p iii. ———.—Grant in consideration of maintenance for life.—A woman, 69 years old, transferred land to defts. in consideration of her maintenance for life, which transfer the Supreme Ct. of Tasmania on her death set aside as procured by undue influence:—Held: the transaction was properly set aside.

834a. —.]—Where the relations between a donor & donee raise a presumption that the donee had influence over the donor, the ct. will set aside the gift unless the donee establishes that it was the spontaneous act of the donor acting in circumstances which enabled him to exercise an independent will, & which justified the ct. in holding that it was the result of a free exercise of the donor's will. If the evidence establishes the fact above stated it should not be disregarded merely because the donor did not receive independent legal advice. On the other hand, the receipt of independent legal advice may rebut the presumption although it is not acted upon. But to have that effect it must be given with a knowledge of all the relevant circumstances, & be such as a competent & honest adviser would give if acting solely in the interest of the donor.

A Malay woman, who was a great age & wholly illiterate, executed a deed of gift of landed property in Singapore in favour of her nephew, who had the management of all her affairs. Before executing the deed the donor had independent advice from a lawyer who acted in good faith. He was unaware, however, that the gift constituted practically the whole of the donor's property, & did not bring home to her mind that she could more prudently, & equally effectively, benefit the donee by bestowing the property upon him by will:—Held: the gift should be set aside, as the presumption which arose was not rebutted.—INCHE NORIAH v. SHAIK ALLIE BIN OMAR, [1929] A. C. 127; 98 L. J. P. C. 1; 140 L. T. 121; 45 T. L. R. 1, P. C.

t. i. — Onus of proof.]—The fact that deft., who had set up the defence of fraud to an action on a guarantee, proved that he could not read or write the English language, that in which the guarantee was written, was held not to be sufficient of itself in the present case to raise such a prima facie presumption of fraud as to justify the trial judge in placing on pltt. the burden of proving affirmatively that that portion of the document, which deft. attacked, was in fact read over to him & that he understood the same.—*LASBY v. The deed was explained to the patient by her solr., but he was unaware of the proportion the property conveyed bore to her whole estate. Both parties were alive at the date of the trial, & gave evidence:—Held: (1) the relationship of doctor & patient existed between the parties; (2) a person giving independent advice must be aware of the total amount of the donor's property & the proportion the part given bears to the whole; (3) the onus, which lay upon applt., to prove that the gift was the result of the free exercise of resp.'s independent will having been discharged to the trial judge's satisfaction, the ct. in the

One M., a moneylender whose exors. were appts., had advanced various sums to the resp. between the end of 1927 & Sept., 1928, amounting in all to £2,203 17s. 7d. In Sept., 1928, M. refused to make any further advance, but offered to purchase the whole interest under the grandfather's will & the interest under the father's will to the extent of £1,450 to £125. Resp. saw an independent solr. with whom, however, he only had one short interview, & who seemed to have acquiesced in the transaction as soon as resp. said he was determined to sell. M., at the time of the earlier advances, had insisted on policies for £2,500 on the life of resp. to be taken out & assigned to him, & they were assigned to him absolutely. It seemed probable that resp. paid the first premium & in the surrender of one of them resp. & M. acted jointly & both signed all documents :—Held : (1) the sale had been made at a substantial undervalue, & resp. had had no proper separate advice; (2) the position of the parties was such that it was incumbent on the exors. of M. to prove affirmatively that the transaction was just & equitable, & this they had failed to do; (3) the judge of first instance having decided that the policies had become the absolute property of M. there was nothing in the facts which rendered this view wrong in law.—*PERMANENT TRUSTEE CO. In an action brought some eleven years later to have the transaction set aside :—Held : although inadequacy of consideration for a

the insurance. She signed no proposal for a policy in favour of T., nor was such a proposal signed by T., who was unaware of the transaction, & there was no evidence to show by whom the proposal, which bore to be signed by T., was in fact signed; but a policy in favour of T. was issued by the society & handed to C., who retained it, & paid premiums on it. C. had no insurable interest in the life of T., & she had no intention of benefiting T.. C. having claimed repayment from the society of the premiums paid by her:—Held: C. was entitled to repayment, as, owing to the absence of consensus ad idem, no concluded contract was disclosed either between C. & the society, or between T. & the society.

Opinions, that, on the assumption that a policy on the life of T. for the benefit of C. had been entered into, it was an illegal policy within Life Assurance Act, 1774 (c. 48), & C. was, on that ground also, entitled to repayment of the premiums under Life Assurance Act, 1774 (c. 48), s. 5.—*CAME v. aged three months, at a premium of twopence per week, & in 1925 he effected a similar policy on the life of his son, then aged one month, in each case assuring the amounts respectively set out in a Table contained in the policy. The Table in the policy of 1920 was made out on the basis of a premium of one penny per week & insured sums payable on the death of the life assured varying in amount according to age & the time the policy had been in force; it also contained the following statement: "Twopence per week will assure double the above sums provided that in any case where the amount secured by the larger premium would exceed the limits of assurance prescribed by Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (c. 25), viz., £6 for children under five years of age, & £10 for children under ten years of age, the sum assured shall be limited to £6 or £10 as the case may require." In the policy of 1925 was a statement that the amount payable under it was subject to the limitations of Friendly Societies Act, 1924 (c. 11):—Held: in view of the statements in the two policies limiting the amount insured in each case to the statutory maximum, neither policy contravened the provisions of the Friendly Societies Acts, 1896 & 1924, & was valid.

In 1925 C. signed a proposal for a whole life assurance on the life of her son, then aged one year next birthday, at a weekly premium of one penny for a sum to be assured increasing as per scale up to £15. On the same day she signed a proposal for an endowment assurance on the same life at a weekly premium of threepence for a "sum to be assured £7 14s. payable on attainment of age fifteen or in the event of previous death as per scale." Two policies were issued on the basis of these proposals. On the whole-life policy there was this memorandum: "This life is also assured under [the endowment] policy. Accordingly, the full sum assured printed in the schedule will not come into operation until the attainment of the age of ten. The combined amount payable in the event of earlier death shall not exceed £6 on death under age three, £10 under age six, & £15 under age ten":—Held: as the above quoted memorandum cut down the sums payable under the combined policies to the statutory limit, the policies did not contravene the Friendly Societies Act, 1924 (c. 11), & were valid.—Re HIRST & LIVERPOOL VICTORIA FRIENDLY SOCIETY, Re CLARK & LONDON & MANCHESTER ASSURANCE CO., [1930] 2 K. 175c. ——.]—Appl. insured her child, who was born on May 2, 1927, a month after its birth, the premium to be 2d. a week. Friendly Societies Act, 1924 (c. 11), s. 2 (1), stated that Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (c. 25), s. 62, should have effect "as if for that section the following section were substituted," & provided that a society should not insure or pay on the death of a child under three years of age any sum of money which exceeded or which, when added to any amount payable on the death of that child by any other society or branch or by any trade union, exceeded £6. By Industrial Assurance Act, 1923 (c. 8), s. 21, it was required that any such policy of insurance should set out in distinctive type a statement of the effect of sect. 62. Appl. claimed from resp. co. the return of her premiums on the grounds that (a) under sect. 62 as amended by sect. 2 (1) of the Act of 1924 the sum insured exceeded the amount allowed, & (b) under sect. 21 of the Act of 1923 the policy did not set out a statement of the effect of sect. 62 as amended. Sect. 62 of the Act of 1896 was left unamended & unrepealed by the Act of 1924, but under the latter Act was to be read as provided by the Act of 1924. The policy was issued for a penny premium, & that was altered to twopence premium, & it was then stated that the amount payable on death was ascertainable from Sched. B., but that, the premium in this case being twopence, the amounts stated in Sched. B were increased in proportion. That would bring the amounts over what was allowed by sect. 62 as amended, but to the above statement was added "subject to the conditions of the Friendly Societies Act." In a second proviso on the face of the policy it was stated that the policy was issued "subject to the provisions of sect. 62 of Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (c. 25), as amended by the Industrial Assurance Act, 1923 (c. 8)—the provisions of which would, it was argued, make it illegal." Then followed the effect of sect. 62 without the express language introduced by the Act of 1924:—Held: the child had not been insured for sums in excess of the amounts permitted by sect. 62 of the Act of 1896 as amended by sect. 2 (1) of the Act of 1924, having regard to the effect of the statements in the policy, & particularly the proviso, & to the fact that sect. 62 of the Act of 1896 still existed, not having been repealed, though the amendment of it in the Act of 1923 had been repealed, & though sect. 62 had now to be read as if it had the effect set out in sect. 2 (1) of the Act of 1924. The co. had not committed an offence against sect. 21 of the Act of 1923, as it used the very language in its policy which had been used by the Legislature from 1896 to 1924, & did introduce the effect of sect. 62, & it was immaterial that the Act of 1924 was not specifically mentioned.—Re SMITH & BRITANNIC ASSURANCE CO.'S ARBITRATION, [1933] 1 K. ## Part VIII.—Licences.

375a. — Coursing—What amounts to.—Resp. was charged with having killed a hare when he had no licence to kill game, as required by sect. 4 of Game Licences Act, 1860 (c. 90). Resp. owned three greyhounds, which he kept for coursing & sport. On the day of the alleged offence he was riding his horse in a field, with the permission of the owner, & had with him two of his greyhounds. There were no other persons or dogs present. The two greyhounds chased a hare, overtook & killed it. Thereupon resp. galloped across the field to where the greyhounds were, picked up the hare, put it in a bag, & placed the bag in the bottom of a hedge :—Held : these facts constituted the killing of a hare by coursing with greyhounds within the meaning of the third exception in Game Licences Act, 1860 (c. 90), s. 5, which excepted from the duties & provisions of that Act : “ (3) the pursuing & killing of hares . . . by coursing with greyhounds, . . . ” ; therefore, the justices were right in acquitting resp. The exception is not restricted to any organized sport of coursing hares.—DOLBY v. HALMSHAW, [1937] 1 K. B. 196 ; [1936] 3 All E. R. 229 ; 106 L. J. K. B. 169 ; 155 L. T. 533 ; 100 J. sp. Presence in game reserve armed.—Presence in a game reserve in the middle of the night with arms & dressed in hunting clothes is sufficient to sustain a conviction under the Game Act.—R. v. JACKSON (1937), 68 Can. C. C. 134.—CAN.

Deft. was prosecuted for pursuing a hare with a greyhound without having a game certificate, contrary to Game Certificates (Ireland) Act, 1842, ss. 2, 5. Deft. had coursed a hare with a single greyhound on certain lands, but produced a written permission from the owner of the lands to do so. The resident magistrate held that failure to take out a licence under Game Licences Act, 1860, formed the basis of the charge, & deft. was exempted on sect. 5, exception 3, of that Act, in respect of coursing a hare with his greyhound, & dismissed the summons. On a case stated :—Held : the resident magistrate was wrong in deciding that deft. came within Game Licences Act 1860, s. 5, exception 3.—R. (NEVIN) v. CLARKE, [1930] N. I. 174.—IR.

to settle for losses sustained:—Held: assuming the State law to be that if the contract were to be dealt in such a way that the difference in prices would be settled according to the rise & fall of the market, & no grain be either delivered or accepted, the contract would be a gambling contract & illegal, it lay upon defts. to establish clearly that such was the character of the dealing.—*RIE v. The parties agreed to refer the question to Tattersall's Committee. The Committee decided that the amount payable was £1,000, & that it was to be paid within seven days. In an action to recover the £1,000 pltf. alleged that debt. had agreed to abide by the decision of the Committee:—Held: as the parties only referred to Tattersall's Committee the question whether the bet was at 100 to 1 or at 33 to 1, & as there was no further agreement by debt. for good consideration to pay such sum as the Committee might find to be payable, the action failed.—*Hyde v. No payment except the first payment of £11 was made, & pltf. brought the present action to recover the balance:—Held: as the threatened action was one which could not have been successful, being one in respect of a gaming debt, the agreement not to bring it was no consideration for debt.'s fresh promise to pay the debt. The avoidance of publicity necessary to support a new consideration does not refer to the publicity resulting from the bringing of an action in the cts.—POTELIAKHOFF v. TEAKLE, [1938] 2 K. a number of bookmakers. On settling day, being unable to pay, he consulted a solr., whose managing clerk, W., happened to be a member of the Committee of Tattersall's Club. After a general discussion of the position W. was sent to Tattersall's Club to inform some, or all, of the bookmakers concerned, including pltf., that debt. could not pay at that time, but would pay them when he could. It was alleged that W., as debt.'s agent, entered into an agreement with pltf. to the effect that if pltf. did not "post" debt. as a defaulter at Tattersall's Club, he would pay what he owed in full within a reasonable time, & that thereby a legal obligation to pay the debt was created:—Held: W. had no authority from debt. to enter into any such contract on his behalf.—*O'MALLEY v. 252 i. ————]—Prizes provided out of admission money.—A person hired a hall for one night, & another hall for two nights, & advertised that whist drives, open to the public on payment of one shilling for admission, would be held in the halls on those nights. A large number of people attended, & prizes were awarded to the successful players. The purchase of the prizes was defrayed out of the admission money, any balance over being retained by the promoter:—Held: (1) the playing of progressive whist was gaming, in view of the facts that the element of chance predominated in the game, & that the prizes were derived from the admission money, & it was immaterial whether the proceedings were or were not detrimental to the morals of the community; (2) accused had managed, conducted, or carried on gaming in the premises, although his operations had been restricted to three isolated occasions.—*BUNTON v. On a prosecution under sect. 3 of Gaming & Betting Act, 1912, charging M. with being the keeper of a common gaming house the police gave evidence that they saw people playing poker with both money & counters, & heard expressions used which indicated that gambling was in progress. It was proved that the club was open every day of the week to a very late hour, & that it was competent for any member of the public to join the club upon paying 2s.

entrance fee & having his name approved. M. was convicted:—Held: poker is not an unlawful game; however, there was evidence upon which the magistrate could find that the club tended to cause a public mischief & was, accordingly, a common gaming house & the rule nisi, therefore, should be discharged with costs.—*Re LISLE, Ex p. 278 1. Whether dominant element of skill.—Deft. kept for use by the public on his premises a number of machines, known by the name of "Diddler." Any one wishing to use one of these machines purchased from deft. discs at the price of seven for 6d. He inserted one disc in a slot & pulled a handle, which caused three rollers to revolve. On each roller was printed a number of devices, such as cherries, roses, etc. If certain combinations of these devices stopped opposite a pointer on the face of the machine, the player won a certain number of discs. With these he could purchase on the premises certain goods. The winning combinations & the odds for each were printed on the front of the machine in view of the player. If none of these combinations stopped opposite the pointer, the player lost his disc. The machine was fitted with a control, by which the player could stop the rollers, one at a time, & so endeavour to obtain a winning combination. There were 15 machines on the premises. Deft. was prosecuted under Gaming Houses Act, 1864, s. 4, that he, being the occupier of the premises, did use them for the purpose of unlawful gaming. The justice was satisfied on the evidence that the majority of the persons who used the machine would be players of less than average skill, &, therefore, held that the game was one in which the chances were not favourable alike to all players, including the owner of the machine, & accordingly convicted the deft. :—

284a. House used for game where chances not alike favourable to all players.]—The committee of management of a members' club installed in the club certain machines for the use of members only & for the purpose of giving additional pleasure to the members. The machines were operated by means of pennies inserted in a slot. The player, having first inserted a penny, depressed a handle, causing three cylinders to revolve on which were depicted bells, bars & fruits. On the cylinders ceasing to revolve the player either lost his penny or received winnings up to twenty pennies, according to the combination of fruits &/or bells &/or bars opposite a pointer. The machine automatically filled a jack pot from its winnings, & the pennies in the jack pot were returned to the player who obtained the combination of three bars. The machines were similar in type to other machines for the user of which persons had been convicted under the Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (c. 38), where the persons had used the machines in shops or places of public entertainment or in proprietary clubs. Four members of the committee of management of the club in question were charged under Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (c. 38), s. 4, for being persons having the care & management of certain premises, to wit, the club, which were then being used for the purpose of unlawful gaming being carried on therein. The contention of the members of the committee of management was that the position of a members' club was analogous to that of a private house, & that gaming upon the machines in a members' club was therefore not unlawful gaming:—Held: in order that a house should be a common gaming house within s. 2 of the Gaming Act, 1845 (c. 109), s. 2, it was not necessary that some person should be keeping the house for his gain, lucre or living; it was sufficient that it was a house kept or used for playing at any game where the chances of the game being played therein are not alike favourable to all the players; the chances of the game played on the machines in this club were not alike favourable to all the players, & that the club was a members' club did not prevent the club premises being kept or used for the purpose of unlawful gaming being carried on therein, & therefore the members of the committee of management of the club could be convicted of the offence charged under Gaming Houses Act, 1854 (c. 38), s. 4.—*DANIELS v. r iii. ———.—On an appeal from a conviction for unlawfully keeping a common betting house:—Held: certain perforated pasteboard cards marked in duplicate, & similar to those used for checking hats at a hotel, constituted, under all the circumstances & in the absence of any explanation of their presence, a "means or contrivance for betting" within sect. 986 (2) of the Criminal Code, & therefore, the finding of them on the accused premises raised a prima facie case against him under said sub-sect. In order to raise a prima facie case under sect. 986 (2) it is not necessary that the search on which the means or contrivances for betting were found should have been made under a valid search warrant.—*R. v. e i. ———.—Keeping bank—Proof of—When necessary.—Accused was charged originally with keeping a disorderly house, to wit, a common gaming house, contrary to sect. 229 of Criminal Code. On the trial before the magistrate the charge was amended to read that the accused kept a disorderly house, to wit, a common gaming house, "as defined in sub-sect. (b), part (1), of sect. 226 of the Criminal Code," contrary to sect. 229 of the Criminal Code. The accused was convicted. On appeal:—Held: because of the amendment, the accused was not charged merely with keeping a common gaming house but with keeping a place used for playing therein at any game of chance or any mixed game of chance & skill in which a bank was kept by one or more of the players exclusively of the others, & therefore, the Crown was bound to prove that in the place in question a bank was so kept, & as proof of this was not to be found within the appeal book, the conviction must be set aside.—*R. v. b iii. — Hotel area.—On a charge of street betting, under sect. 104 of Police Offences Act, 1928, the place in which the offence was alleged to have been committed was a tiled area in front of an hotel & abutting on the public footpath. The area, which was open, uncovered, & raised three or four inches above the level of the footpath, formed part of the allotment on which the hotel was built:—Held: the area was not a “street.”—*WEAVING v. 314. 1. Enclosed grounds — Cricket ground.—A grass field occupied by a cricket club, was bounded on all four sides by a wire fence in good condition. The fence along its western side ran at the foot of a railway embankment, which was admittedly not a public place within Street Betting Act, 1906, s. 1 (4). Between the northern end of this fence & the fence bounding the northern side of the ground was a gateway, 3 feet wide, giving access to the ground. The gateposts were in position, but the gate had been missing for some time. The portion of the field adjoining the gateway was not used for cricket, & the public had unrestricted access to that portion & gathered there in numbers every day. In a prosecution for loitering for the purpose of betting:—Held: the cricket ground was not a “public place” within sect. 1 (4) in respect that it could not be described as “unenclosed.”—*Foggo v. winning dog, under deduction of 10 per cent. to cover expenses:—Held: the purchasers of vouchers entered into the betting transactions with each other, & not with the co. or the manager; & the fact that a charge was made for the use of the totalisator & for the service of operating it did not involve the co. or the manager in a contravention of the sects. libelled.—STRATHERN v. SCOTTISH GREYHOUND RACING CO., [1930] S. C. (J.) 24.—SCOT.

o ii. —.—[The tenant of certain premises in which a totalisator was installed, & his assistants, were charged with a contravention of sect. 407 of Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892. It was proved that members of the public resorted to the premises in large numbers for the purpose of betting through the totalisator on the results of dog races. Those betting purchased vouchers costing 1s. each, which were marked with the number of the dog selected for backing. The money thus paid represented the stakes, & after each race, the whole money staked was divided among the backers of the winning dog, under deduction of 10 per cent., which was retained by the tenant of the premises for himself & his assistants:—Held: sect. 407 of Burgh Police Act, applied only to the same class of premises as that to which Betting Act, 1853 (c. 119), s. 1, applied, namely, premises where the betting carried on took place between the management & persons resorting thereto, & as the premises were not of this description, the conviction fell to be

399b. — Social club communicating by telephone with bookmaker's office.—Pltf. let premises to defts. on condition that they should not be used for any illegal purpose. Defts. permitted a social club to occupy the premises for carrying out its objects as such. That club made an arrangement with a bookmaker to act for its members & open an account with them. Telephones were installed connecting the club premises with the bookmaker's office, & the members of the club thereby communicated their proposed bets to the bookmaker for his acceptance. The bookmaker supplied to the club premises information as to races which was published there. A commission was paid by the bookmaker to the club on all bets made with its members through him. Pltf. brought an action against defts. for breach of the contract of letting in permitting the premises to be used for a purpose which was illegal under Betting Act, 1853 (c. 119), & claiming a declaration to that effect, an injunction, & damages:—Held: defts. were permitting the premises to be "used" for the purpose of a person (the bookmaker) "procured" by the occupier (the club) betting with persons resorting thereto within & contrary to sect. 1 of the Act, & pltf. was entitled to the relief which he claimed.—*SAMUEL v. hotel. Accused, who was a roomer at the hotel, was found in the rotunda looking at a copy of "The Morning Digest," a turf publication, which was spread out on a desk, & writing on a small pad of paper. One or two men were with him, also looking at the publication. A copy of another turf publication was also on the desk, but behind a glass case. Certain letters & figures on the pad were written by the accused in the sight of a constable, unnoticed by the accused. The sheet contained 15 other entries of the same class & in the same handwriting. Figures in pencil were written after the name of each of the horses listed in the publications, & a witness, who was a bookmaker, testified that the figures were such as would be put there by one intending to take bets. He also gave the opinion that the entries on the pad, except the last two items, showed bets on horses. The last item was that which the constable saw the accused write. With respect to those two items the witness said that they might be entries of a bet but that if he had been making the entries he would have made them in another way:—Held: the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the conviction.—*R. v. The date in the information was "between May 30, 1936, & June 1, 1936." Persons taking part in the game paid 1d. It was found as a fact that on May 30, 1936, pennies were laid on the table by the players & taken by applt. or his assistants before the game was decided. On May 31 & June 1, 1936, the pennies paid by the players were paid after the game was decided. Applt. contended (i) that the information was bad for duplicity, & (ii) that what was paid by the players could not properly be called a deposit on any bet:—Held: (1) the information charged only one offence, & the fact that three days were comprised in the period named in the information did not make it bad; (2) although the players paid the whole stake payable in respect of the game this was none the less a "deposit" within Betting Act, 1853 (c. 119), s. 4.—*JOEL v. k i. — *F. caused to be distributed through the post to householders some thousands of circulars announcing a Rugby football competition & inviting entries, accompanied by 1s., the entrants to pick the winners of thirteen local football matches to be played on a named Saturday. The prize-money offered was £20, to be paid to the competitor, or divided among competitors, who correctly picked all the winning teams in the list of matches; & if more than one correct solution were received, the prize-money was to be equally divided among the successful competitors. No one succeeded in correctly forecasting the result of all the matches; several were correct as to eleven of them. F. was prosecuted under sect. 63 (c) of Gaming Act, 1908, for causing to be sent to divers persons "circulars inviting such persons to make bets on the result of a certain sport"—viz. the said Rugby football matches. A Stipendiary Magistrate dismissed the information. On appeal from such determination:—Held: allowing the appeal, (1) the circular was an invitation to make a bet or wager; (2) the bet came within the words "such bet or wager" occurring in sect. 63 (c) of Gaming Act, 1908.—*MCLENNAN v. 415a. —.—.]—Appls. were the responsible proprietors of a four-page weekly newspaper, which was sold at 6d. a copy, & which had in winter a weekly circulation of over 32,000 copies. The newspaper contained what was called a "Free Football Competition" with a coupon giving particulars of future football matches & a column for the competitors to fill in their forecast of the results, a prize of £150 being offered for a correct forecast of all the results & a prize of £100 for a correct forecast of nine results, but no money was to be sent with the coupons. Appls. were summoned for unlawfully publishing a coupon of a ready-money football betting business contrary to sect. 1 of the above Act. The justices found that the majority of the persons who bought the newspaper did so for the sake of the coupon, & that appls. had circulated coupons of a ready-money football betting business, & they convicted appls. :—Held: the case was typical of the mischief aimed at by the Act, & the justices' decision must be affirmed.—*SUTTLE v. He issued printed instructions to every collector not to accept or collect money invested by clients until after the matches had been played, as it was illegal to accept it at the time the investment was made. One collector sometimes accepted money at the time of investment without resp.'s knowledge, but did not send the money to resp. until after the results of the matches were known. The words "credit only" were printed on every coupon in bold type. In consequence of the said collector's conduct, resp. was charged with publishing coupons of two ready money football betting businesses, contrary to the Ready Money Football Betting Act, 1920 (c. 52), s. 1:—Held: as resp. published coupons of a credit business & gave most careful instructions to his collectors not to take money at the time of investment, he was innocent of the offences with which he was charged.—*WILSON v. Apart from the coupons & matters connected therewith the paper contained very little reading matter, & the majority of purchasers bought it for the sake of the coupons. The commission agents were convicted of knowingly printing & circulating circulars or coupons of a ready-money football betting business:—Held: the paper was a circular or coupon of the business of appls., & conviction sustained.—*JAMESON v. The leaflet informed a person desirous of participating in the scheme that on filling up & sending in an attached order form together with £1 there would be sent to him a note case & a supply of the leaflets, the order forms of which would be marked with a number allotted to him; that he should get other persons to give orders for note cases, using these forms; that he would be entitled to no benefit from 421 i. Power of arrest.—Police, having obtained a warrant to enter a stable (number 4), watched the stable for a period of twenty minutes, during which it was visited by about twenty men, six of whom carried what appeared to be betting slips in their hands. On the police approaching the stable, accused, who had been in the stable all the time, ran into a neighbouring stable (number 3), one of them carrying a bundle of betting lines. The police took them back into stable number 4, where they were searched & taken into custody, & the money found on them was seized. The accused were convicted & sentenced:—Held: the escape of the accused with their papers from the premises to which the warrant applied & the fact that they were thereafter taken back by the police to these premises did not render the subsequent arrest & seizure illegal under the warrant.—*MORRIS v. He was brought before the petty sessions et. on the charge, that he being the user of a certain house situate in the city of B., did use the same for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. On the charge being proceeded with before the magistrates a preliminary objection was raised to the hearing of the charge on the ground (inter alia) that no summons had been served on deft. charging him with the offence alleged, a summons being, it was submitted, a condition precedent to any proceedings under the Act charging an offence. The magistrates dismissed the case without prejudice, but stated a case for the opinion of the K. B. D.:—Held: the magistrates were wrong in point of law in dismissing the charge on the ground that the information or summons was a condition precedent to the exercise of their jurisdiction & it should be remitted to them to proceed according to law.—R. (LOCKHART) v. McKENNA, [1933] N. I. 21.—IR.

Accused sent ten currency notes of Rs.5 each to the manufacturers of Park Drive cigarettes at Belfast, who put each note in a packet of cigarettes, mixed those packets with other packets which contained no notes, & sent them out to accused in India. On a prosecution of accused under second part of Indian Penal Code, s. 294A:—Held: the scheme published by accused for distribution of prizes by lot or chance amounted to a lottery.—*EMPEROR v. 430 ii. — — — — — Accused invited the public to subscribe a large sum for an assoc. whose object was said to be the relief of people in debt or distress. There was no provision for the return of the capital sum, but one-sixth of the interest derived therefrom was to be used for the objects of the assoc., whilst the remainder became divisible every three months among the subscribers as cash bonuses. These bonuses were distributed by lot:—Held: a lottery.—A. D. RAJ v. KING-EMPEROR (1932), I. L. R. 10 Ran. 232.—IND.

n i. — — — — — Bonds in series—Payment not dependent on knowledge or skill.—In a prosecution for a contravention of Lotteries Act, 1823, it was established that the promoters had formed & put into execution a scheme for the sale of bonds, each of which entitled the holder on certain conditions to £150. To qualify for this sum a participant had first to obtain a bond at the cost of 1s. either from the promoters or from a friend. This was the parent of a family of bonds which was brought into existence by a process of sub-sales. The holder of the parent bond had to buy from the promoters four bonds for 3s. & to sell them to four friends for 1s. each. These four bonds were the first generation, & each of the four holders of them had to repeat the same process, thus bringing the second generation of sixteen bonds into existence. The process had to be repeated until the sixth generation of 4096 bonds had come into existence, making, for the complete series, 5461 bonds. On the occurrence of this event the holder of the parent bond became entitled to £150. Not only was each individual bond a member of a family of bonds, but it could itself become the parent of a new family, & the holder of it was entitled to £150 as soon as its sixth generation was completed:—Held: the scheme was a lottery, in respect that the occurrence of the event upon which payment fell to be made could neither be approximately predicted nor materially influenced by the exercise of any knowledge, experience, art, or skill on the part of the holder of the parent bond.—BARNES v. STRATHERN [1929] S. C. (J.) 41.—SCOT.

p i. — — — — — Not dependent on skill alone.—The chance, which the prohibition in Criminal Code against lotteries & other species of gambling, has in contemplation is the chance or risk which the competitor is taking. Therefore, in a case where he is required to estimate a number, the prohibition applies unless the correct number can be ascertained by skill alone without any element of chance, even though the number to be estimated is an actually existing number at the time the estimate is made.—R. v. IRWIN, R. v. LONG, [1928] 4 D. L. R. 625; [1928] 2 W. W. R. 597; 50 Can. Crim. Cas. 159; 23 Alta. L. R. 506.—CAN.

the first three of these orders, but would be paid a commission of 10s. on every other order received on his forms & on sales made as a result of these orders; that whenever an order was received on one of his forms, after the first three, a supply of forms also marked with his number would be sent to the buyer, & that the participant would be paid a commission of 10s. on each of the first three sales made by every one to whom one of the forms so numbered was sent; & that there was no time limit to the scheme, but that the maximum commission payable to a participant was £20,000:—Held: inasmuch as, with the exception of commissions resulting from orders directly obtained by the participant himself, all the commissions which he received would result from orders given by persons over whom he had no control & would depend so far as he was concerned not upon his skill or work but upon pure chance, the scheme was a "lottery" within Lotteries Act, 1823 (c. 60), s. 41.—*PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS DIRECTOR v. 433b. — Crossword puzzle.—A newspaper published an advertisement of a crossword puzzle competition with a money prize, for which a competitor entered by posting his solution along with a specified fee to the office of the newspaper. The puzzle was so constructed that in a number of instances a clue could be satisfied by only one word having no alternative, while in other instances the clue suggested two or more alternative words which might not all be equally appropriate. The competition editor had prepared beforehand a test solution of the puzzle, & the prize was to be awarded to the competitor whose solution happened to correspond most closely to that of the competition editor, although, if all the solutions sent in were examined & compared on their merits, the solution of that competitor might not be found to be intrinsically the best:—Held: the proprietors & the printer of the newspaper were guilty of the offence of printing & publishing an advertisement of a "lottery" under Betting & Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 22 (1) (c) (i).—*COLES v. b (p. 454) ix. — Picture competition.—A. was the manager of a certain co. which conducted & advertised the holding of certain competitions known as the "Bran Tub Competition." The scheme of the competition was to take a sentence from an Australian newspaper & reproduce it in puzzle form. The competitors were invited to interpret in words the pictorial rendering of the sentence. The prize was awarded to the person who reproduced the precise words of the sentence chosen or who got nearest to that particular collection of words:—Held: the competition was a matter of chance & therefore, a lottery within sect. 3 (6) of Lotteries & Art Unions Act, 1901–1929.—Re CHRISTENSEN, Ex p. b (p. 454) x. — ————]*—A. published an advertisement in a newspaper setting out the terms of a "competition" of which he was the promoter & controller. The nature of the competition was as follows:—A "frame" was set out in the advertisement consisting of a number of vertical rows of squares, each row containing a different number of squares. In each row one of the squares contained a letter of the alphabet. To each row was allotted a "clue" & to each letter a number. The competitor was asked to fill in the blank squares with letters so as to make each row contain a word of as many letters as there were squares in the row, the word filled in being "suitable to the clue" allotted to the particular row. Each letter in the word was then given its numerical value & the competitor who supplied words the total numerical value of which was the highest won the competition. The advertisement stated that the "missing words" were "ordinary everyday words" & that they must be "recognised words suitable to the clues" & must be found in Chambers's dictionary. In the conduct of the competition unusual & obsolete words used were accepted:—Held: the magistrate was entitled to find that the conduct of the competition was such as to preclude the fair consideration of the answers & the competition was a lottery within Lotteries & Art Unions Act, 1901–1929.—*Re CHRISTENSEN, Ex p. sr. Distribution of cash commissions dependent on chance.—The system under a scheme known as the Multiplication Bureau operated as follows: "A" enrolled as a member at a fee of £1 & when he got four new members he was entitled to a commission of 15s. on the enrolment of the fourth member; when this fourth member got three new members "A" was entitled to 12s. 6d. commission on each, & when these three each got three new members "A" was entitled to 12s. 6d. commission on the resulting nine enrolments, & the process continued until the commissions accruing to "A" totalled £1,500:—Held: the scheme is to be regarded, in substance, as one in which the main source of the cash commissions is the indirect enrolments & the receipt of commissions arising from such enrolments, or any of them, depends purely on chance far as the receiving member is con-

names of races, horses & jockeys, & also the name of the co., & an offer to exchange the tickets for goods on demand. A member of the public receiving a ticket was entitled to bet on the combinations named on the ticket, in which case if he won he received the amount of his bet; if he lost he was entitled to exchange the ticket for goods worth sixpence, through the firm's agents. By conditions on the ticket he paid no money to the agents, but undertook to pay 6d. if he lost. The co. & its directors were convicted at petty sessions under Betting & Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), & appealed:—Held: (1) the scheme was a lottery; (2) the appearance of the name of the co. on the tickets, together with evidence that the same agent had distributed similar tickets which had been exchanged by the co. for goods, was evidence connecting the agent with the co.—*GORDON, MACKAY & Co., LTD. v. N. subscribed to a State Lottery & purchased a number of tickets. Shares in each of the tickets so obtained were sold to other persons. N. was charged with knowingly allowing a room to be used for the sale of shares in chances for the disposal of money by chance in contravention of the Gaming & Betting Act, 1912:—Held: (1) appt. was guilty of an offence within sects. 4 & 17 of Gaming & Betting Act, 1912; (2) sect. 5 of State Lotteries Act did not afford him protection, as that sect. is limited to the acquisition of tickets in State Lotteries & does not confer an unfettered transferable right on the holder of a ticket.—*RUSSELL v. o l. —.—.—Three pursuers sued a defender for payment of balances due to them under a contract whereby, as they averred, the four parties had contributed equally to the purchase of a ticket in a foreign lottery, the ticket to be taken in defender's name & any proceeds to be divided equally among the parties. Defender, who disputed that any balances were due, averred that he had purchased the ticket in Scotland before any contract had been entered into, & he pleaded that the action was incompetent in respect that it was based on a pactum illicitum. The proceeds of the ticket in question arose in part from a subsale to a Glasgow bookmaker:—Held: (1) a lottery was not illegal by the common law of Scotland; (2) the lottery in question was not illegal by statute, Betting & Lotteries Act, 1934, s. 21, having no application to foreign lotteries; (3) sect. 22 (1), while applying to foreign lotteries, did not make the purchase of a ticket in a foreign country, or the setting up of a partnership for that purpose, illegal; (4) accordingly, the contract, as averred by pursuers, was capable of lawful performance; but (5) having regard to the different account of the transaction given by defender, it was impossible either to sustain or to repel defender's plea until the facts had been ascertained. The circular continued: "Each customer's name is entered in rotation in our ledger and cash gifts are paid out accordingly." The names & addresses of new customers were entered in the ledger in the exact order in which they had been obtained, the list of one canvasser's customers on his return to the office being completely entered before that of the next was begun. Resp. awarded her bonus each week to the next customer whose name was on the list after that of the customer last to receive a bonus, provided that the customer was still regularly buying

Applt. was convicted under Betting & Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 22 (1) (b) of having the tickets in his possession for the purpose of sale or dis-

480a. — Powers of Control Board—Payment of commission for placing bets on totalisators of Board.—The Racecourse Betting Control Board was established as a statutory body with powers to set up & operate totalisators on approved racecourses for the purposes of betting, subject to the conditions required by the Act being observed. In the years 1929 to 1933 inclusive the Board had entered into a series of agreements with two cos., in order to procure the collection of bets from persons not on the racecourse on race days, & the placing of such bets on the totalisator on the course. The Board agreed to pay commission at certain rates dependent on the amount of money placed by means of such bets, & also the expenses of its agents in collecting & telephoning the bets to the course, such commission & expenses being paid by the Board out of the totalisator fund. The Board also agreed with one of the cos. to provide at its own expense all reasonable facilities required by the co. for the purpose of its business on the authorised racecourses & to make contributions towards the initial expenses of that co. In an action brought at the relation of the secretary of a book-makers' organisation, asking for a declaration that such agreements & payments were invalid & ultra vires the Board:—Held: (1) the action of the Board in agreeing to pay the commission & the expenses of providing facilities on the authorised racecourses was reasonably incidental to the power conferred on the Board by Racecourse Betting Act, 1928 (c. 41), & was therefore not ultra vires.

In so doing the Board was only taking steps to increase the bets placed on the totalisators on the courses; (2) in contributing towards the preliminary expenses of one of the cos. the Board was acting ultra vires, as it was thereby assisting in the general business of the co. which as between itself & its customers was carrying on "off-the-course" betting.—*A.-G. v. 480c. — Excessive dividend paid—Mistake of fact—Whether recoverable.—Deft. made a bet on the totalisator & won £42 10s. Intending to pay him forty one-pound notes, a clerk, employed by ptlfs., paid him forty five-pound notes. When this was discovered, deft. offered to pay back any sum ptlfs. could prove he had been overpaid. Seventeen of the five-pound notes in his possession were proved by the serial numbers to have been paid to him by ptlfs., & this £85 was returned to them. Rule 4 of the Totalisator Rules made by ptlfs. under the provisions of the Racecourse Betting Act, 1928, s. 2 (8), contains the following provision: "Dividends should be examined before leaving these windows, as mistakes cannot be rectified later." Upon an action being brought to recover the balance of the amount by which deft. had been overpaid, deft. counterclaimed for the sum of £85 he had repaid, & it was contended on his behalf that rule 4 was bilateral, & applied equally whether ptlfs. had paid a backer too much or too little:—Held: the rules were not any part of the contract between the parties, & did not affect ptlfs.' common law rights to recover money paid under a mistake of fact.—*RACECOURSE BETTING CONTROL BOARD v. 501a. Betting & Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 26—Betting pool business—What amounts to.—A co. whose only trade or business was that of a bookmaker as defined in Part I. of the Betting & Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), advertised a "football pool" in a weekly newspaper. Readers were thereby invited to fill in coupons relating to any one or more of a series of football matches to be played on the following Saturday, with their respective forecasts of the results, including the score, & to stake a named sum thereon. Under the rules of the pool entrants were required on the day before the matches were played to remit the coupons they had filled up to the co. with a promise in writing, duly signed, to pay the amount they were staking in case they lost, on the Tuesday following. The total amount received from entrants, less 10 per cent., was distributed by the co. among those whose forecasts turned out to be correct, or most nearly correct. On a motion by pltf., a director of deft. co., for an injunction to restrain them from so conducting the pool:—Held: the pool was not a "competition in which prizes are offered for forecasts of the result . . . of a future event" within the prohibition contained in Betting & Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 26, but a pari-mutuel or pool betting operation conducted by a bookmaker, & therefore lawful within sect. 3 & the proviso to sect. 26 of the Act.—*ELDERTON v. d i. ——— Receipt of money with coupons—Whether offence under Street Betting Act.—In a complaint under Street Betting Act, 1906, it was proved that accused received in the street from various persons a large number of slips accompanied by sums of money. The slips were odd pieces of paper, upon each of which were written the names of at least one group of eight football teams, to which was added a name, number or other symbol, for identifying the sender of the slip. Accused did not submit lists of football teams for the purpose of selection, the names of such teams being selected by the senders of the slips from lists of teams advertised or reported in the public press to play on the Saturday following the date on which the slips were received by accused. The teams selected were those which the senders of the slips predicted would be winning teams on that Saturday. Along with each slip was sent 1s., the understanding being that, after the results of the matches were published, accused would examine the forecasts made, & thereafter would deduct from the money received a sum in name of commission, & hand over the balance to the person sending in the correct forecast if only one forecast was correct, or, if more than one forecast was correct, an equal share of such balance to each of the senders of correct forecasts. If no correct selection was sent in there was no distribution, & the whole contributions were carried forward to the next week; which procedure was repeated until a correct forecast was made, or until the end of the football season arrived, when if there had been no correct selection received, the money in hand, less a commission to the accused, was distributed among those who had sent it:—Held: accused was engaged in betting transactions & was guilty of an offence under Street Betting Act, 1906.—*YEDALL v. customers were asked to place thirteen named articles in the order of their popularity as shown by the actual voting of the entrants themselves. A number of money & other prizes were offered to those whose lists most nearly agreed with that shown by the voting as a whole. No entrance fee was charged, but each entrance form had to be accompanied by part of a bag or wrapper from one of the named articles:—Held: since the competitors were not asked to judge the real merits of the articles but to guess how other people would guess at their popularity, there was material on which a magistrate was justified in finding that the result depended entirely on chance & in convicting the advertising manager of the promoters of an offence under Lotteries Act, 1823 (c. 60), s. 41, —*HOBBS v. An accompanying circular explained that 25 per cent. of the money subscribed would be devoted to the museum & that the remaining 75 per cent. would be distributed "in such manner as the organisers in their absolute discretion shall think fit," but that £20,000 would be distributed in prizes. It was apparently originally contemplated that the money should be used for a sweepstake on the Grand National horse race, but owing to a communication from the police there was substituted a scheme whereby subscribers were invited to place in order of popularity, as shown by the general votes of the competitors, ten rôles played by the late Dame Ellen Terry:—Held: the scheme was a lottery. The fact that the original books of tickets were sent only to members of the theatrical profession & persons in "Who's Who" did not so limit the class of competitors as to render it possible by any element of skill to arrive at a reasonable forecast of how they would vote; especially as they might be expected to sell many tickets to persons outside those two categories, so that the competition was in effect open to the public.—*CHALLIS v. The puzzle consisted of a set of nine small sketches each intended to depict the name, as spelt or pronounced, of some place in the United Kingdom. A list of names providing clues was given. Competitors were required to fill in blank forms with their solutions & send them in to the editor with entrance fees. The artist who drew the sketches was instructed to make some of them capable of representing one or other of two or three different places. In an action brought to test the legality of the competition:—Held: (1) success in the competition depended on the exercise of a substantial degree of skill, there being no predetermined solution of the puzzle, & therefore it did not come within the prohibition contained in Betting & Lotteries Act, 1934 (c. 58), s. 26 (1) (b); (2) the competition was not a "game" within the prohibition of Betting Act, 1853 (c. 119), s. 1.—*WITTY v. In 1909 the co. entered into an agreement under seal with the council in which it was recited that before the passing of the Act “it was agreed by & between the predecessors of the gas co. & the council that the agreement then in force for public lighting should continue to remain in force & be binding on both parties until the council should determine the same,” & that “it has been deemed desirable by the said parties hereto that the terms of the said agreement for the public lighting shall be set out as hereinafter mentioned.” By the operative part of the agreement the co. agreed to light all the public lamps within the district “from & after the first day in Sept. in every year up to the following first day of May inclusive” on certain terms; & provisions were made for increasing the number of lamps. There was no provision as to the period for which the agreement was to run or giving either party a right to determine it. By a supplemental agreement dated June 30, 1921, the times of lighting & the charges were varied, & clause 1 (c) provided that new lanterns supplied by the co. should become the property of the council without payment after fifteen years if the agreements continued for so long, “& if the said agreements be determined before the expiration of such period” the council were to pay for them. On Apr. 30, 1927, the council gave notice to determine the agreement on Aug. 31, 1927:—Held: having regard to the recitals in the original agreement & clause 1 (c) of the supplementary agreement & to the nature of the contracts they were determinable by notice.—*CREDITON GAS CO. v. The cause of the break in the welded joint through which the gas leaked was found to be the operations of the City of Edmonton in constructing a storm sewer, involving underground work immediately beneath applts.' main. On a claim for damages by resps. against applts.:—Held: that the words "locate & construct" in Alberta Water, Gas, Electric & Telephone

Cos. Act, 1922, s. 13, refer only to the initial location or construction of the works, & do not include "maintain," & applts. were not subject to the rule of strict or absolute liability, but were entitled to the protection accorded to persons acting under statutory authority; but as applts. were carrying gas at high pressure which was very dangerous, if it should escape, they owed a duty to the owners of the hotel, to exercise reasonable care & skill that the owners should not be damaged. The degree of care which that duty involved must be proportioned to the degree of risk involved. The City might at any time be conducting operations in connection with their sewers in the vicinity of applts.' mains, & it was the duty of applts. to watch such operations. The operations in question were, from their public nature & conspicuous character & from the time during which they went on, such that a failure by applts. to know of them was plainly not consistent with due care on their part in the interests of members of the public likely to be

In an action by which the corpn. sought to recover from the co. the cost of such reinstatement, the co. by counterclaim sought to recover from the corpn. the cost of repairing the gas main:—Held: the liability of the corpn. for the damage to the gas main depended upon negligence in the exercise of its statutory powers causing unnecessary damage to the co., & the onus of proving such negligence had not been discharged by the co.—*METROPOLITAN GAS CO. v. q i. ——. Liability of city.—A provision in a city charter imposing on the city the duty of constructing all public works & apparatus appertaining thereto so as not to endanger the public health or safety includes the duty to keep said works & apparatus in such repair as will effect the same object. In the present case:—Held: deft. city had not met the obligation of this provision with respect to a service pipe connecting a natural gas main with pltf.'s premises; the gradual development & enlargement of a leak in the stopcock in said service pipe was not a "breaking" of the pipe or attachments within a section of the charter giving the city immunity for damages caused by "breaking."—*REID v. sp. Escape of gas—Act of stranger.—An action for damages for an injury to pltf.'s health caused by an escape of gas owing to the breaking of deft.'s service pipe in premises in which pltf. resided. Pltf. lived with her mother, who was the householder & who apparently had contracted for the supply of gas. No contractual relation between pltf. & deft. was established, & no negligence was proven against deft. The pipes had been properly laid & were in sound condition when the break occurred. The cause of the break was the action of an occupant of the front part of the lot in so altering his premises that additional weight was thrown laterally against the sunken pipe until it broke at a joint, permitting gas to escape & pass under ground to the basement, whence it reached pltf.'s bedroom. Deft.'s charter required it "so to construct & locate their works & all apparatus & appurtenances thereto appertaining or therewith connected & whosoever situated as in no wise to endanger the public health, convenience, or safety." The sect. then goes on to provide for inspection at all reasonable times by the municipal authorities of the co.'s works, apparatus & appurtenances, & the obeying by the co. of all reasonable orders & directions following such inspection with penalties for disobedience of the same:—Held:

affected. Although under the exception to the rule in *Rylands v. sw. Meter placed in inaccessible position.]—In an action of damages for personal injuries which was brought against Glasgow Corpn., the pursuer, an elderly woman, averred that her house was originally supplied by defenders, under their statutory powers, with gas for cooking & lighting purposes through a meter of ordinary type which was placed above a cupboard 7 feet 9 inches in height; that this meter was subsequently removed & a slot meter, operated by a lever after the insertion of a coin, was installed in exactly the same position by defenders' servants, notwithstanding a request by the pursuer that it could be placed in a more accessible position within the cupboard; that, while standing on a stepladder which she had to use when proceeding to obtain a fresh supply of gas from the meter, she overbalanced, fell to the floor, & was injured; that it was the duty of defenders, if they chose to instal a slot meter, to place it in a position reasonably accessible to persons using it; & that they had negligently failed in that duty. She further explained that, prior to the accident, she had continued to use the meter because of the repeated assurances of defenders' servants that it would be placed in a more accessible position.—Held: the averments of pursuer relevantly set forth a case for inquiry.—POLLOCK v. GLASGOW CORPN., [1936] S. C. 428.—SCOT.

Deft. proceeded to the locality where the seals were & found that pltf. had taken some of them on board his vessel, had counted others of the patch, & was in the act of taking on board his vessel the remainder, his crew being then in charge. Deft. then took charge of the remainder of the seals & had them conveyed on board his own vessel, & refused to permit pltf. to participate in the same. In an action by pltf. for the seals so taken the jury found for pltf.; on a rule nisi to set aside the verdict:—Held: there was a valid gift from W. to deft. such as would cause a legal transfer of property; & further, it was in the power of W. to transfer property floating on the sea which he had himself the power to secure.—*DOYLE v. ### PART III. SECT. 2.

xx. —.—.]—Before it can be said that influence which a donee is found to have had with his donor was such as to justify the ct. in setting aside the gift, under the doctrine of presumed undue influence, it must appear that the relations between the donor & donee were such that the latter was under some duty to advise or manage for, or look after the interest of, the donor.—*BRADLEY, LANG & SCRAGG v. ### PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

q i. —.—.]—The question whether a purchase of property by a parent in the name of his wife or child was a gift by way of advancement must be determined by what took place at the time the property was purchased. A gift to a parent from a child under age & under the parental dominion stands on the same footing as any other gift once the presumption of parental influence is rebutted.—ROYAL TRUST CO. v. JONES, [1935] 1 W. W. R. 46.—CAN.

PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.—B.

89 i. Whether presumption arises.—The facts that a daughter (her mother standing in loco parentis to her) was not informed of the deposit by her mother of a sum of money in her name & that the mother died before the daughter assented to or accepted such intended gift, do not prevent the gift, if intended, being complete subject to the donee's right to disclaim, the acceptance of a gift by a donee being presumed until his dissent is signified, even though the donee is not aware of the gift :—Held : on the evidence, the presumption of a gift to the daughter had not been rebutted.—IRVIN v. BROOKES, [1937] N. Z. L. R. 73 ; 13 N. Z. L. J. 20.—N.Z.

89 ii. —.—.]—There is a presumption of gift to the daughter in the case of a bank account opened by a widowed mother in the joint names of herself & her married daughter.—RADWAY & SHORTT v. RADWAY, [1938] 2 D. L. R. 578 ; O. R. 234.—CAN.

89 iii. —.—.]—C. G. who died in 1912, by his will, having provided for his children by his first wife & for his son, P. G., by his second wife, left certain property to his second wife, who survived him for many years. P. G. by the terms of his father's will received £100 per annum during his minority for his maintenance & education, & after attaining age in 1912 became absolutely entitled to certain property yielding between £50 & £100 per annum. Having qualified as a solr, he became a partner in a Dublin firm of solrs. in 1918. P. G. continued to reside with his mother until her death in 1930. He married in 1933 & died in 1934. By his will he left all his property to his wife. His mother between the years 1913 & 1930 invested considerable sums of money in various securities ; some of which she purchased in her own name, & others in the joint names of herself & P. G. :—Held : the presumption of advancement applied to the securities purchased in the joint names, & P. G.'s widow was therefore entitled to the securities ; further, even if the presumption of advancement did not apply, yet, on the evidence, the intention of P. G.'s mother to benefit her son was sufficiently strong to rebut any presumption of a resulting trust.—Re GRIMES, GRIMES v. GRIMES, [1937] 1. R. 470.—IR.

PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 2.—D.

sg. Grandfather & grandchild.—The relationship of grandfather & grandson, when the grandfather is not in loco parentis & the father is living, raises no presumption of a gift.—MACDONALD v. YOUNG (1934), 7 M. P. R. 602.—CAN.

PART III. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 3.

113 i. Contrary intention of donor—Investments as trustee for daughters.—Held : the circumstances did not rebut the presumption that the money was intended as an advancement to the children.—JONES v. KINNEAR (1882), N. S. R. (4 R. & G.) 1.—CAN.

sv. —.—.]—A father purchased land, the transfer of which was taken in the name of his daughter. The price paid was £700, of which the daughter contributed £286 10s., the father providing the balance. The title, when issued, was held by the father. Rents & outgoings were shared equally by the father & daughter during the father's life. At the request of the father the daughter signed an acknowledgment that the father owned "one equal half part of 'the house' in her name," being the property purchased. The father died leaving his widow a life interest in his residuary estate & until her death she received one-half of the net rents of the property. There were statements by the father contemporaneous with the gift showing that he might give his daughter the whole of the property, but he had never done so :—Held : on these facts, any presumption of advancement of the whole property to the deft. was rebutted.—MILLARD v. LUCAS, [1936] S. A. S. R. 166.—AUS.

sw. —.—.]—In 1920 deft. S. had an account with a savings bank the amount of which exceeded the amount permitted to bear interest. Acting on a suggestion made either by his own banker or an employee of the savings bank, & desiring to keep his money at call & earning interest, S. opened at various times three trust accounts, signing on each occasion the declaration of trust required by the bank whereby he constituted himself trustee for each of his three infant daughters of all moneys standing at any time to his credit in each of the three accounts. By these declarations he declared that the moneys should be the exclusive property of the respective daughters & that he would not own or be interested (otherwise than as trustee) in any of the moneys. It was clear on the evidence of deft. that he always regarded & treated the moneys as his own, & thought of the declarations as formalities designed to overcome a technical obstacle, & that he never had any intention of disposing of the beneficial interest in any of the moneys deposited :—Held : deft. had not constituted himself a trustee of any of the moneys, & was entitled thereto as beneficial owner.—STARR v. STARR, [1935] S. A. S. R. 263.—AUS.

PART III. SECT. 4.

124 viii. —.—.]—A., having large sums on deposit, gave the manager of his bank a number of deposit receipts in the joint names of A. & P. payable to them or either of them. He frequently took out sums & re-deposited in the same terms. In an action by P. against A.'s exors. claiming that the sums in the joint names of A. & P. did not form part of A.'s estate :—Held : pltf. had failed to rebut the implication of a resulting trust which arose in favour of A. & his representatives, pltf. having failed to prove any intention on the part of A. to part with his property in the deposited money during his life, & a disposition to take effect only upon his death, if he should not previously have disposed of the money, could only be effected by a declaration of trust, which was admitted not to have been made by him.—OWENS v. BYRNE (1922), 56 I. L. T. 125.—IR.

127a. —.]—J. M., being in failing health & expecting death in a short time, deposited a sum of £10,000 with the B. Bank & received from the Bank a deposit receipt in this form: "£10,000 . . . Received from J. M. & J. D. M. (a minor)," the son of J. M., . . . "the sum of ten thousand pounds sterling for credit in deposit account. Not transferable. . . Payable to either or the survivor. . . This receipt must be produced when payment of either principal or interest is desired." By his will, after giving certain legacies, J. M. directed his exors. to hold the rest of his property in trust for J. D. M. until he should attain the age of twenty-five years, & on his attaining that age, for him absolutely. Until J. D. M. attained that age the business of testator was to be carried on by the exors. There were other dispositions in case J. D. M. died under that age, an event which did not happen. On the death of J. M. the exors. withdrew & redeposited the sum of £10,000 & obtained a new deposit receipt for that sum in their own names. The business of testator was carried on at a loss. The business account kept by the exors. with the B. Bank was continually overdrawn. The exors. repeatedly paid the overdrafts out of the £10,000 & in so doing finally exhausted the whole sum. Both before & after he came of age J. D. M. took part in the management of the business. Soon after attaining the age of twenty-five J. D. M. claimed that he was entitled to the £10,000 deposited by J. M., & brought an action against the B. Bank to recover that sum as having been wrongfully & without his authority paid by the Bank to the exors.:—Held: by LORD WARRINGTON & LORD MACMILLAN, the exors. were entitled to receive the money & to apply it in due course of administration as directed by the will of J. M.; LORD THAKERTON agreeing on the ground that on the evidence as a whole J. M. did not purport to act as agent for J. D. M. in making the contract with the Bank, so as to make J. D. M. a contracting party, but that he alone contracted with the Bank, though for the benefit of J. D. M. as a third party; by LORD ATKIN, the contract was made by J. M. on behalf of himself & J. D. M., & if J. D. M. had ratified the act done on his behalf he would have made himself a party to the contract; but by his conduct he had represented to the Bank that he did not intend to ratify the act done on his behalf, having so acted he could not afterwards ratify it, & consequently he had never become a party to the contract.—*McEvoy v. 124 xi. — — —.]—An elderly lady & her nephew opened a joint account in the Commonwealth Savings Bank by the transfer of a large sum from an account in the lady's name. The nephew, who assisted his aunt in all her matters of business, did not contribute to the account, which was kept in funds by payments from the aunt's investments. The account was used solely for the purpose of supplying the aunt's needs. Moneys for this purpose were withdrawn by the nephew as required, the withdrawal slips being signed by both the aunt & the nephew. When the account was opened the aunt told the nephew & others that any balance remaining in the account at her death would belong to the nephew. Upon his aunt's death the nephew claimed the balance of the account:—Held: (1) the presumption of a resulting trust in favour of the aunt & her estate was rebutted by the evidence of her intention to benefit the nephew; consequently, his legal right to the balance by survivorship prevailed; (2) the gift thus conferred upon the nephew was not a testamentary disposition.—*RUSSELL v. ### SUB-SECT. 4.—APPOINTMENT OF DONEE AS ADMINISTRATOR.

- 280a. Intention expressed in donor's lifetime—Continuing intention.—The legal estate acquired by an administrator is no less effectual than that of an exor. appointed by will to perfect an imperfect gift made by deceased owner of the estate to the administrator.

On the death of his father, J. handed over the furniture & title deeds of a certain house & premises, forming part of his father's estate, to S. & allowed her to occupy the house rent free. J. died intestate, & S. was appointed an administratrix:—Held: there was a continuing intention on the part of the donor up to the time of his death to give the property to the donee, & by her appointment as an administratrix she had acquired the legal estate.—*Re JAMES, JAMES v. The investments were sold from time to time & others substituted, & at the time of the death of W. were represented by securities to the face value of £9,000 which were in the name & custody of the bank. W. never informed the bank that he had made the shares over to his son, but requested them to accept release orders signed by his son & all dividends on the original & substituted securities were credited to the account of the son in the books of the firm. By a letter handed to his son W. informed the exors. of his will that the shares were the property of his son & did not form part of his assets & so informed one of the exors. verbally. W. did nothing further to perfect the gift of the securities but appointed his son as one of the exors. of the will:—Held: the securities did not form part of the estate of W. but were the property of his son, subject to the limitation that the exors., if any, of the value of the securities, when realised, over the sum of £5,000 belonged to the exors. as assets of the testator.—*Re WILSON, GROVE-WHITE v. 356a. Gift made in contemplation of death from incurable disease—Death from different illness—Gift valid.]—A donatio mortis causâ is not generally conditioned upon the donor dying from the same disorder as that from which he is suffering, & contemplates the probability of death, at the time it is made.

By a mtge. made in 1922 the widow of J., who was tenant for life under his will, mortgaged a farm to W., a brother of J., to secure £1,000 & interest at 5 per cent. The widow died in 1923, having appointed her two daughters, E. & X., exors. of her will. The mtge. contained no personal covenant for payment of the principal, & the mtgee. accepted interest at 3½ per cent., reduced in 1924 to 3 per cent. In 1924 W., who was on very friendly terms with his brother's family, gave the deeds relating to the farm, other than the mtge. deed, to E. & X., to retain in their custody. On Dec. 11, 1927, W., who had since 1922 been suffering from an incurable disease & knew that he could not possibly live long, called upon his nieces, who were aware of his state of health, & gave them an envelope indorsed in his own handwriting: "Deeds relating to X. farm to be to S., delivered to the father of S. a transfer of the land to S. & the duplicate certificate of title. He subsequently repossessed himself of the transfer & certificate before S. had an opportunity to register the transfer which he destroyed:—Held: the inchoate gift to S. was effectually revoked & S. was not entitled to be recorded as owner of the land.—*SMITH v. 311 xxiv. ———.]—A woman, engaged in domestic service & without a home of her own, placed her savings in deposit-receipt in 1900 in name of herself & her sister to be drawn by either of them or the survivor. The receipt was then handed to the sister, who kept it at her home, but periodically the deposit was uplifted by the depositor & redeposited with interest & further savings added to it. The depositor had a niece & nephew, her sister's children, & on the sister's death in 1921, the name of the niece was substituted as the second name in the receipt, the receipt being thereupon handed by her to him. The depositor regarded her sister's family as her only relatives & their home as her own, & on several occasions, she had stated to third persons that the sum on deposit was to go to the survivor of the persons named in the receipt. The depositor having died in 1930, survived by the nephew:—Held: the terms of the deposit-receipt, taken in conjunction with the depositor's expressions of intention, were sufficient to instruct a donation mortis causâ of the sum on deposit in favour of the nephew.—*MACPHERSON'S EXECUTRIX v. 386a. Instructions to use power of attorney.]—A testatrix had given her son a power of attorney in very wide terms over certain shares & money standing in her name at a bank abroad. When about to undergo an operation she told the son to get such shares & money transferred into his own name, as she wanted him to have them if anything should happen to her. The son accordingly, acting as her agent under the power of attorney, instructed the bank to transfer the shares & money into his name. Testatrix died a few days later. The question arose as to whether there had been a good donatio mortis causa of the shares & money or whether they formed part of the estate of testatrix. By her will testatrix gave her trustees a power of advancement in favour of the son, inter alia, for “the purchase of a business or a share in a business”:—Held: (1) the mere giving of the power of attorney was not in itself a sufficient parting by testatrix with her dominion over the shares & money to make it a donatio mortis causa, but when testatrix instructed her son to transfer the shares & money into his own name, she parted with her dominion over the property, & there was a good donatio mortis causa; (2) the question was one which arose in the administration of the estate, & as the estate was being administered in England according to English law, it was a question which ought to be determined according to the law of England, subject to the condition that, the property being situated abroad, that which was said to constitute the parting with dominion ought to be something which would be an effective parting with dominion in the place abroad where the property was situated; (3) the power of advancement did not extend to an advance of a sum to be applied & invested with the trustees of Lloyd's as a fund which would be available to meet the son's liabilities, so as to enable him to become an underwriter at Lloyd's; (4) as such an advance would not be expedient for the trust as a whole, the ct. could not sanction it under Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 57 (1).—*Re CRAVEN'S ESTATE, LLOYDS BANK, LTD. v. was for her. The box was not delivered until after the death of deceased, &, on being opened, it was found to contain a post office savings bank-book, which showed a certain sum standing to the credit of deceased. It was not disputed that there was an intention to make a donatio mortis causa:—Held: the intended donatio mortis causa failed, as there was no delivery, actual or constructive, to A. D., since the mere instructions by deceased to her servant, & the obedience to these instructions, were not sufficient to make the servant an agent of the intended donee.—Re THOMPSON'S ESTATE, [1928] 1 R. 606.—IR.

157 i. Insufficiency of past consideration.—Pltf. sued deft. for moneys due under an agreement in writing whereby he undertook that if a co. in which pltf. had at his request taken shares, failed to pay a ten per cent. dividend in certain years, he would pay pltf. within seven days the amount of such ten per cent. dividends. The agreement was executed some months after pltf. had taken up shares. Pltf. alleged that the agreement was made in pursuance of an agreement made antecedent to his purchase of the shares. Deft. denied the antecedent agreement & claimed that the guarantee having been given for a past consideration, was not enforceable:—Held: on the facts, although the question of a guarantee had been raised between the parties prior to pltf.'s taking up the shares, there had been no animus contrahendi on the part of deft. to give the guarantee before the shares were acquired & the guarantee being therefore given for a past consideration was a nudum pactum & unenforceable.—*POWER v. Subsequently pltfs. indorsed the bills by writing their name beneath, instead of above, that of deft. In an action on the bills deft. contended that as they had never been negotiated he did not incur the liabilities of an indorser & that his agreement, if any, was a guarantee & was not in writing, & he pleaded the Statute of Frauds:—Held: in the above circumstances pltfs. had authority under Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 20, to complete the bills by adding their indorsement, & that even if deft.'s agreement was a contract of guarantee the Statute of Frauds was no answer to a claim on the bills, & therefore the action succeeded.—*MCCALL BROS., LTD. v. They were afterwards indorsed by the drawer with the intention of completing them & making them enforceable against the third party if necessary, the signature of the drawer being placed below that of the third party on the backs of the bills. The acceptor not having paid the bills at maturity, the drawer brought an action upon them against the third party as indorser:—Held: he was entitled to recover, inasmuch as the fact that his signature instead of being above was below that of the third party on the backs of the bills was a mere inadvertence which did not nullify the intentions of the parties or alter the rights which they would otherwise have had.—*NATIONAL SALES CORPN., LTD. v. In an action against partners founded upon fraudulent misrepresentations as to the credit of the firm, one of the defts. pleaded non-compliance with sect. 6 of Lord Tenterden's Act:—Held: sects. 8, 12 & 13 of Partnership Act had not the effect of impliedly repealing sect. 6 in so far as it related to false representations by a partner, & the plea was a good defence to the cause of action except in so far as the representations were in writing signed by deft.—*TURNBULL & CO. v. - 559a. Guarantee of payments to contractor—Subject to due execution of work.]—A limited co. employed a building contractor to execute certain repairs & decorations to a building by an agreement under seal made between the co., one T. therein called the guarantor, & a bank, & the contractor. The agreement provided that the contractor should do the work for the sum of £1,500, to be paid in four equal instalments on named dates "subject to the said works being duly executed in accordance with this agreement." By clause 11 of the agreement the guarantor agreed with the contractor & with the bank, & undertook, that the co. should, subject to the said works being duly executed in accordance with the agreement, duly & punctually make to the contractor the payments mentioned above, & that upon any default for three days on the part of the co. (written notice of which should be given by the contractor to the guarantor within six days of the default) in making any payment on the prescribed date, the guarantor would himself immediately make the payment so in default to the contractor. By clause 12 the bank agreed with the contractor & undertook, that upon any default for three days or more (written notice of which should be given to the bank by the contractor within three days of the default) on the part of the guarantor in making any payment under clause 11 the bank would immediately make the payment so in default to the contractor. The co. did not pay the first instalment. The contractor gave no notice either to the guarantor or to the bank. The contractor then issued a specially indorsed writ against the bank claiming the first instalment. The case was heard by an Official Referee, who found that at the date of the writ it was necessary to spend £80 in order to complete the work in accordance with the agreement. He deducted this sum from the amount claimed, & gave judgment for pltf. for the balance:—Held: the defts. were not liable.

By SCRUTTON & SLESSER, L.J.J., because it was a condition precedent to their liability that the works should be duly executed in accordance with the agreement, & the works were not so executed. By GREER & SLESSER, L.J.J., because the liability of defts. depended upon that of T., & he was never liable, because it was a condition precedent to his liability that pltf. should have given him notice of the

There was a proviso that either party should have the right at any time to determine the tenancy by giving to the other one month's notice in writing of his intention so to do, the said notice to determine on any gale day. The following guarantee for the payment of the rent was endorsed on the agreement & signed by deft.: "I hereby guarantee the full & punctual payment of the rent reserved by the within agreement." Eight months' rent being in arrear pltf. sued deft. on his guarantee to recover the amount. Deft. admitted liability for the first month's rent but denied liability in respect of the seven other months, contending that he offered to guarantee payment of the rent on the implied condition that he should receive notice of any default by the tenant in making full & punctual payment, & that no notice was given to him, & accordingly he was unable to exercise his right to revoke his offer:—Held: deft.'s contention was unsustainable & pltf. was entitled to judgment for the amount claimed.—O'CONNOR v. 561a. Guarantee of secured loan—Whether security for loan condition precedent.—By a deed of guarantee for the repayment of a loan of £250,000 & interest, which recited that the lenders had, at the request of the guarantors, advanced to the borrowers £250,000, upon security of a charge on certain shares, the guarantors covenanted, in the event of the borrowers failing to make the repayments provided for, forthwith to repay to the lenders the said sum of £250,000, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum. The deed further provided that, whatever the position between the lenders & the borrowers, the guarantors should be liable for all moneys due as principal debtors, & that they were not to be released from liability by reason of time being given by the lenders, or by their taking no steps to protect their securities. The shares above mentioned were at no time secured, & had not in fact been issued. Upon default in repayment of part of the loan, the liquidator of the guarantors rejected the proof by the liquidators of the lenders, contending that the security of the charge on the shares was a condition precedent to the guarantee:—Held: (1) upon a true construction of the deed of guarantee, the guarantors were not bound by the guarantee, as the security of the charge on the shares was a condition precedent to the guarantee; (2) the recital in the deed was not binding upon the guarantors, who were not estopped from setting up the facts, nor from asserting the non-existence of a charge on the shares.—*GREER v. He cannot, therefore, claim repayment of tax on "interest" on an advance from a bank under the provision of Income Tax Act, 1918 (c. 40), s. 36 (1). In the events which happened M.L. received advances from the New York branch of defts. which they were unable to repay. Defts. had in their custody cash & securities belonging to pltfs. & refused to deliver them to pltfs. on demand, on the ground that the indebtedness of M.L. exceeded the value of the cash & securities. Pltfs. brought this action to recover possession of the cash & securities, together with interest, & defts. counterclaimed for, inter alia, a declaration that they were entitled to retain the cash & realise the securities & retain the proceeds in part satisfaction of the indebtedness of M.L.:—Held: the indebtedness of M.L. to the New York branch of defts. was covered by the guarantee given to defts. by M.T., & the total amount of that indebtedness exceeded the value of the cash & securities of pltfs. which were in the possession of defts.; & defts. were therefore entitled to retain the cash & securities in part satisfaction of their claim under the guarantee.—*MANN, TAYLOR & Co., LTD. v. The borrowers, & pltf. as surety, covenanted jointly & severally to repay the loan on demand & interest meantime half-yearly. The mtge. gave to the bank power to sell & to appoint a receiver immediately at any time after demand for repayment, without notice to the borrowers; & it provided that, as between the borrowers & their property & the surety & his, the former should be primarily liable under mtge., without affecting the bank's rights & remedies, & that the surety, although surety for the borrowers only as between himself & them, should, as between himself & the bank, be liable to the bank as a principal debtor under the mtge. The borrowers later agreed between themselves that the money should be deemed to have been lent in the proportion of one-half to each of them, & that each should be liable to repay his half & to pay the interest on it meanwhile, should be able, under the mtge., to recover any payments made by him in respect of the other's half & interest, & should be entitled, despite anything in the mtge., to the same security for payments made by him in respect of the other's half as the bank would have if that half were not paid; & the agreement provided that neither borrower should be able to compel the other to repay his half for ten years from the date of the agreement so long as the interest owing thereon should be paid within thirty days of the same becoming due. Deft. failed to pay certain interest due from him within thirty days of its becoming due. Moneys of the estate were stolen by the solr. through the use of blank cheques which E. had left with him after E. had signed them. In an action by a beneficiary of the estate judgment was given against E. as administrator & against the co. as surety. By third party notice the co. claimed to be entitled to be indemnified by E. This claim was dismissed & the co. appealed :—Held : the co. by requiring the estate moneys to be so deposited & by requiring the cheques to be countersigned by the solr. as its agent did not clothe him with such authority to intermeddle in the administration of the estate that it must now be said that in stealing the moneys the solr. was acting as agent for the co.; the extent of his authority as agent for the co. was to countersign cheques, & the loss to the estate was not caused by the countersigning but by the use of the cheques, over which the administrator had full control, after they had been so signed; & in handling the cheques so signed & the proceeds thereof the solr. was acting as solr. for the administrator & not as agent for the co. Co. under a hire-purchase agreement dated July 6, 1927, whereby the co., "the owners," agreed to let to one T., "the principal," a motor car on the terms that he should be at liberty to purchase the car at a fixed price, paying as a first payment £22 6s. 8d., & thereafter monthly payments of £14 3s. 4d., until the whole was paid. The payments by the principal under this agreement were guaranteed by deft. as surety under a document signed by her on July 6, 1927. The principal afterwards fell in arrears in payment of the monthly instalments, & on Feb. 3, 1928, he wrote to the owners offering a cheque for £20 drawn by a friend in part payment. On Feb. 4 the owners wrote accepting this cheque & stipulating that the rest of the arrears should be paid within one month. The cheque was sent to the owners, but the arrears, which amounted to £79, were not paid within one month, & the owners then took back the car, acting upon their powers under the hire-purchase agreement. On Sept. 18, 1928, the owners assigned their rights under that agreement to pltf's., who claimed £122 in all from deft. as surety:—Held: (1) there was a binding contract by the owners to give time to the principal debtor; (2) the liability for payments under the hire-purchase agreement was one & indivisible, & deft. was entirely discharged from her suretyship.—*MIDLAND MOTOR SHOWROOMS v. 1223a. Charge by several persons of properties—Release of deeds deposited by one.]—By a joint & several memorandum of charge twelve persons, including six resps., deposited deeds with applt. as security to relieve applt. from the entire burden of a guarantee given by him to a bank for the overdraft of S. & Co., & they thereby respectively charged the hereditaments to which the deeds related with repayment of all money to become due from S. & Co. Applt., at the request of C., one of the twelve persons, allowed her to take the deeds deposited by her away for the purpose of raising a loan. S. & Co. having gone into liquidation, the bank called upon applt. to make good his guarantee. Thereupon resps. brought an action claiming that they were entitled to have all the deeds deposited by them under the terms of the charge discharged from the debt to which they were made liable to contribute under the charge, on the ground that, by applt. allowing C. to withdraw the deeds deposited by her, their risk had been increased:—Held: (1) there had been an alteration made in the position of those whose properties remained deposited as securities under the charge by reason of applt. allowing the withdrawal by C. of the deeds deposited by her, & they not having consented to the alteration, their properties, the deeds of which they had deposited, were discharged from all claims under the charge; their right of marshalling had been affected by the withdrawal of the deeds of one of the parties, & the materiality of the alteration was a question to be decided by them; (2) the same reasoning was applicable, whether what was contributed were securities or personal liability.—SMITH v.

1224a. Guarantee of call on shares—Forfeiture of shares—Discharge of surety.]—On Dec. 29, 1920, D. & P., who afterwards became bkpt., joined with others in entering into an agreement with a co., whereby they guaranteed to them the payment of all the instalments then owing upon the shares in the co. specified in the schedule to the agreement, the amount of D. & P.'s liability being limited to the sum therein mentioned. The shareholders having been served with notice calling upon them to pay the instalments due on their respective shares on pain of forfeiture, & D. & P. also having been required to pay the same on or before Feb. 17, 1925, in case of non-compliance by the shareholders with the notice, & default in payment having been made by both the shareholders & by D. & P., the co. forfeited the bulk of the shares in pursuance of the power conferred upon them by their arts. of assocn. Art. 31 was as follows: "Any member whose shares have been forfeited shall, notwithstanding such forfeiture, be liable to pay to the co. all calls or other moneys, interest & expenses, whether presently payable or not, owing in respect of such shares at the time of forfeiture, together with interest thereon from the time of forfeiture until payment at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum or such less rate as may be fixed by the Board." On Sept. 9, 1925, a receiving order in bkpcy. was made against D. & P., & on Apr. 10 the co. lodged their proof for the amount claimed to be due on the guarantee. Upon a motion by the co. for the reversal of the decision of the trustee in rejecting their proof:—Held: (1) the right created by art. 31 was a new right which arose upon the forfeiture of the shares & one which placed a more onerous obligation upon the shareholders than if the shares had not been forfeited. The forfeiture, therefore, was an interference with the rights of the sureties as against the principal debtor; (2) the co. had by exercising their option to forfeit the shares deprived the sureties of their lien on the shares which they would have been entitled to, had the co., in lieu of forfeiture, compelled them to pay the calls; with the result that, upon the principles stated in Polak v. Everett, No. 1222, ante, D. & P. were discharged from their liability as sureties under the guarantee & the decision of the trustee in their bkpcy. in rejecting the proof of the co. was right.—*Re DARWEN & PEARCE, [1927] 1 Ch. 176; 95 L. 1522a. ———.]—Disclaimer of a lease by a trustee in bkpcy. operates as a discharge of a surety for payment of the rent, notwithstanding that part of the demised premises have been sublet before the bkpcy.

The lessee of certain premises was adjudicated a bkpt., & his trustee, acting in pursuance of the powers conferred on him by 1914 Act, s. 54, disclaimed the lease. Prior to the bkpcy., the lessee had sublet a portion of the premises. Deft. had guaranteed the payment of the rent, & the lessors obtained from him sums equal to the rent which would have accrued if the lease had still been in existence:—Held: the disclaimer discharged the surety, on the ground that if the surety were called on to pay he would have a right of proof against the bkpt.'s estate, whereas the intention of sect. 54 was that the bkpt. & his property should be released from all liability.—*MORRIS (D.) & SONS, LTD. v. is an organisation for promoting & protecting the interests of those engaged in the corn trade. Membership is confined to individuals, but cos., either public or private, engaged in the trade can have the advantages of membership by nominating, in the case of a private co., one representative, on condition that a guarantee by the directors is given to the assocn. that the co. will duly discharge its liabilities to members, & for the conduct of its representative. Deft. in 1931 had joined with S. & two other directors of S. & Co., Ltd., a private co., in a joint & several guarantee to the assocn., given in accordance with this provision. This action was brought by plffs. claiming a declaration that they were entitled as trustees for ten firms & cos. who were creditors of S. & Co., Ltd., to enforce the guarantee in question. S. & Co., Ltd., got into financial difficulties & in 1935 S. executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors under which he was released from all "debts, claims, & demands whatsoever" which the other parties to the deed might have against him with the usual reservation of rights against sureties. ## Part X.—Avoidance of the Guarantee.

1656a. Power to contract out of duty to disclose.—A Harbour & Dock Board, having resolved to enlarge their dock, invited tenders for the work from numerous contractors, informing them where the contract for the work might be inspected & instructing them that they must make local & independent inquiries as to the nature of the surface, strata, soil & sub-soil or ground to be excavated, & the nature & height of the tides, & generally must obtain their own information on all matters affecting the construction, completion & maintenance of the works, & as to all matters which might influence them in making their tender & fixing the rates & prices therein, & that the Board would not be responsible for any information the contractors might obtain except such as was given in reply to a written inquiry addressed to the clerk or manager of the Board. Of several tenders received that of a co., K. & R., Ltd., was by far the lowest. The Board informed K. & R., Ltd., that they were not prepared to accept that tender unless K. & R., Ltd., procured a guarantee to the amount of £50,000 for the due performance of the contract. In compliance with this demand K. & R., Ltd., procured a joint & several bond from an insurance co. whereby that co. & K. & R., Ltd., jointly & severally bound themselves to the Board for the due performance of the contract by K. & R., Ltd. The Board accepted this guarantee, & K. & R., Ltd., entered upon the work in pursuance of the contract, which made the final certificate of the Board's engineers final & binding between the parties. In the course of the work the contractors encountered an unexpected quantity of water in the soil, & the expense of pumping was such that they could not continue the work without further funds. Thereupon the Board advanced them two sums of £20,000 & £25,000 to be repaid upon certain terms; but, notwithstanding these loans, the contractors failed to complete the contract & went into liquidation, & the Board's engineers made a final certificate showing over £78,000 due from the contractors to the Board. This sum included so much of the £45,000 lent to the contractors as remained unpaid at the date of their default. The Board sued the insurance co. on the joint bond:—Held: (1) the bond was a contract of guarantee & not a contract of insurance; (2) there was no such misrepresentation or non-disclosure of material facts by the Board as to invalidate the bond; (3) the loans of £20,000 & £25,000 being outside & independent of the contract, the amount due thereon ought not to have been included in the engineers' final certificate; inasmuch as the amount due & unpaid on the loans was unascertained, the amount due on the bond being equally undefined, the Board

1745a. Distinguished from del credere agency.—Defts. agreed in writing with pltf., stock-brokers on the Stock Exchange, that in consideration of 50 per cent. of the commissions received by pltf. in respect of business introduced to them by defts. the latter would be liable for 50 per cent. of "any loss sustained" by pltf. on such business. X., who had been introduced by defts., became indebted to pltf. in respect of such business. When X. executed an assignment for the benefit of creditors, pltf. thereupon claimed that a "loss" had been sustained within the meaning of the above letter at the time when

d i. ———.—There is no universal obligation on a creditor entering into a contract of suretyship to make disclosure to the surety of all the facts relative to the dealings between the creditor & the principal. There must, however, be no undue concealment, which consists not merely in the omission to disclose such facts as need be mentioned in answer to the surety's questions, but also in the non-disclosure of those facts which the creditor must spontaneously disclose to him. The omission by the creditor to reveal to the surety every fact which under the circumstances the surety would expect not to exist amounts to an implied representation that it does not exist: & it depends upon the nature of the transaction in each case whether the fact not disclosed is so impliedly represented. Where a guarantee was given for the payment of "all moneys which are now or at any time hereafter may be due or owing to the co. from . . . on the general balance of his account with the co." there could not be at the time of its making any implied representation by the co. arising from the co.'s non-communication to the surety of the state of the account that there was no indebtedness to which the guarantee could apply.—*NATIONAL MORTGAGE & AGENCY CO. 1685 i. Character.—An offer, by an employer, who has knowledge of dishonesty on the part of his employee, amounts to a representation to one from whom he seeks or obtains, without disclosure, a fidelity guaranty, that, so far as he is aware, the employee whose fidelity is to be guaranteed is not dishonest. If that representation is untrue, it matters not that the employer's failure to disclose the true situation was not wilful, intentional, or with a view to advantage himself.—

1758a. —.]—A broker, having possession of a government promissory note for Rs.5,000 of the 3½ per cent. loan of 1854–55 on behalf of a lady, who was the holder & indorsee, forged her indorsement to it in his favour & indorsed it for value to resp. bank. The bank, acting in good faith, presented the note for renewal by the government under Indian Securities Act, 1920, s. 12, & received a renewed note in their favour. The lady, becoming aware of the fraud, & of the renewal of the note, sued the Secretary of State in conversion, & recovered the appropriate damages. The Secretary of State then instituted the present action against the bank, claiming to be indemnified against the loss thus sustained by him, on the principle that the renewed note had been issued at the request of the bank, & that he was accordingly entitled to be indemnified against the damage resulting from the renewal. As far as the renewed note was concerned, it was accepted on both sides that it constituted a new contract between the government & the bank, unaffected by the circumstances in which it was issued. The government officer, when issuing the renewed note to the bank, did not exact an indemnity under sect. 21 of the Act. The Secretary of State contended that he was not debarred from relying on an indemnity implied under the common law of India, which in this respect is identical with that of England:—Held: (1) the application to the prescribed officer for a renewed note, & the satisfying him of the justice of the claim, constituted a request from which a common law indemnity against injury to a third party might properly be prima facie implied, notwithstanding the fact that some deliberation might be involved on the part of the officer before he consented to renew the note; (2) sect. 21 provides an added statutory right of indemnity, different from, & in no way inconsistent with, the common law right, & therefore the Secretary of State was entitled to recover upon the common law indemnity.—*SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. —.]—Pl'tfs., a private inquiry agency, carried on the business of providing to approved subscribers confidential reports on companies, firms & persons engaged in trade. The terms upon which the reports were issued were (inter alia) that all statements were strictly confidential, & that every subscriber should indemnify pl'tfs. against any loss or damage they might suffer from the breach by the subscriber of any of the conditions of the contract. Deft. co., an approved subscriber, through its managing director, requested pl'tfs. to furnish information regarding the X. Co. for whom they were agents. The report, being of an unfavourable nature, was communicated by deft. co. to their own solrs. Deft. M., a director of deft. co., with the approval of its managing director, applied for & was furnished with similar information regarding the X. Co., & on the same terms & conditions. M. at once informed the managing director of deft. co. of its contents. The matter having been brought to pl'tfs.' notice by the co. reported on, both defts. at the request of pl'tfs. returned the unfavourable reports.

Pl'tfs., an action for libel having been brought against them in the K. B. Div., commenced proceedings against both defts. for an injunction to restrain disclosure of the unfavourable reports which had been furnished, & a declaration that they were liable to indemnify pl'tfs., against any loss or damage arising from this disclosure. They also claimed damages:—Held: (1) deft. co. did not disclose the report to any person other than its own solrs. & that this did not constitute a breach of contract with pl'tfs. within the meaning of the agreements; (2) deft. M. became a subscriber to pl'tfs.' confidential reports for the purpose of obtaining a report on the X. Co. & communicating the result to the managing director of deft. co.; (3) neither M. nor the managing director of deft. co. was acting as the agent of deft. co. & no breach of contract committed by M. was induced by deft. co. The action against deft. co. therefore failed; (4) the agreement entered into by M. not to disclose the confidential information furnished to him & to indemnify pl'tfs. for any loss or damage which they might suffer from a breach by a subscriber of the conditions upon which reports were furnished, was not void as being against public policy; (5) the disclosure by deft. M., although a breach of this contract, did not create the liability of pl'tfs. to be sued for libel; this liability did not arise directly or indirectly out of any act of the deft. M. & was not therefore within the scope of the express indemnity contained in pl'tfs.' agreement with M. The only liability for damages, therefore, resulted from M.'s own breach of contract, & in the circumstances such damages were merely nominal.—BRADSTREETS BRITISH, LTD. v. HAROLD MITCHELL

One of the terms was that pltfs. When pltfs. were using the gangway some trucks were shunted down the line, & the gangway was destroyed. On Dec. 20, 1929, a train was dispatched by resps.' servants from London, & as it approached the bridge one of the carriage doors, which had swung open, struck two of appls.' workmen, killing one & seriously injuring the other. Resps. were adjudged to pay the representatives of deceased workman & the injured workman £3,614 1s. Resps. claimed indemnity in respect of that liability from appls. The trial judge found that the railway carriage door swung open by reason of its having been insecurely fastened at Fenchurch Street Station, owing to the negligence of resps.' servants, but held that under clause 34 (a) appls. were liable to indemnify resps. The Ct. of Appeal affirmed that decision:—Held: the accident arose in connection with the bridge where the men were working, & the contractors, therefore, under clause 34 (a), must indemnify resps. in respect of the accident.—*FURNESS SHIPBUILDING CO. v. 1908a. Indemnity against loss on debentures—Sale of debentures by party indemnified.]—Deft. was the chairman of the S. Co., which at the end of 1921 was seeking to issue £15,000 First Lien Debentures to rank pari passu with a previous issue of first lien debentures of the same amount; & deft., having interested pltf. in the matter, sent him a letter of indemnity, dated Feb. 17, 1922, in these terms: “Regarding the issue of £15,000 First Lien Debentures of the S. Co. at the price of £80 per £100 . . . I understand you are subscribing for £3,000 of the same at a cost to you of £2,400. In consideration of your giving me one-fourth of any profit you may receive on such investment, I hereby indemnify you against any loss thereon. The expression ‘any profit’ only refers to the redemption price of £100 per £80, which, when received, will show a profit of £20 per bond & the bonus out of the proceeds of any royalties on oil sales from the co.’s properties during the currency of the debentures. . . . The interest you will be entitled to receive from the co. is excluded from the consideration of profits.” The debentures were redeemable on July 1, 1925, but they were secured by two debenture trust deeds which gave power to extend the due date, & in Apr. 1925, steps were taken which resulted in its extension to July 1, 1930. In May & June, 1925, a correspondence took place between pltf. & deft. in which pltf. announced his intention of selling the debentures, & deft. protested against this, claiming that they must be kept till their due date. On July 16, 1925, pltf. put the debentures up for sale, & in the absence of other bidders sold them to his son for £25. He then commenced proceedings to recover the amount of his loss, but the House of Lords decided that nothing was payable under the indemnity until the due date arrived. On July 18, 1928, the co. went into liquidation & pltf., having repurchased the debentures from his son, brought these proceedings to recover his loss:—Held: in selling the debentures pltf. had committed a breach of an implied term of the contract, & having failed to maintain the position essential to enable deft. to receive the consideration for the indemnity, he had committed a breach of a term going to the root of the contract. Deft. had elected by his pleadings in the previous action to treat the contract as at an end & pltf. could not therefore maintain the present action.—GUY-PELL v. FOSTER, [1930] 2 Ch. 169; 99 L. J. She erected a fence round the land side, with gates at three places at which persons other than local inhabitants were charged 1d. toll. Deft., the proprietor of a tea shop at the Western end of pltf.'s land, claimed that the fence obstructed five public or customary rights of way. Four of the alleged public ways were over land flooded at spring tides. For the purpose of asserting these rights, deft. pulled down some of pltf.'s fence, & did not absolve himself from association with a mob which also pulled down another part of the fence. Deft., without joining the A.-G., counterclaimed for a declaration that the five ways were public, alleging that his tea shop gave him an interest in their remaining open which was not possessed by the general public & that therefore the fiat of the A.-G. was not necessary:—Held: (1) there was a public right of way over three of the ways claimed; (2) the damage done by deft. was excessive; (3) the fiat of the A.-G. was necessary.—SEATON v. - 52a. Road leading to the sea.]—Pltf. claimed damages against several defts. for trespassing over his land, & asked for an injunction. Defts. alleged that they were lawfully exercising public rights of way. Evidence was given of public user by five different classes of persons, extending over the whole period of living memory, of two defined ways over pltf.'s land from a public high road to the sea at high-water mark. It was also proved that pltf.'s land was in strict settlement from 1856 to 1908, & that during that period there was never an owner capable of dedication.

- The county ct. judge held that there being no owner capable of dedication during the period of proved public user, he was not entitled to infer dedication from such user. He held also that the ways claimed by defts. had no sufficient terminus ad quem. On appeal:—Held: (1) although the public have only limited rights over the foreshore, the sea may be a sufficient terminus ad quem for a public way, which may now be proved, even though it does not lead to a public place; (2) where there is evidence of public user of a way throughout the period of living memory, but there has been no owner of the land capable of dedication during that period, the tribunal of fact which has to decide the issue of dedication or no dedication may infer a dedication at some date anterior to the earliest proved user by an owner capable of dedication; (3) there is no presumptio juris to compel the tribunal to draw such an inference even from un rebutted evidence of long-continued & uninterrupted user.—WILLIAMS-ELLIS v. COBB, [1935] 1 K. B. 310; 104 L. J. K. B. 109; 152 L. T. 133; 99 J. P. 93; 51 T. L. R. 131; 79 Sol. Jo. 11; 33 L. G. R. 39, C. A.

- 164a. Whether public highway—Claim of dedication.]—Pltfs. claimed a declaration that a way over deft.'s land was a public highway for vehicular traffic up to a certain point & for foot traffic from that point to Cockington Church on the ground that dedication should be presumed from evidence of uninterrupted use by the public throughout living memory & from evidence of reputation. The church was surrounded by deft.'s grounds, & apart from a private path from his grounds, there was no access to the church except by the way in question. Deft. admitted that there was a church way for parishioners along the way, but he denied that there was any public right of way. Since 1774 the title to the property had been such that the owners could, if so minded, have dedicated the way to the public. The freehold of the church was in the incumbent & it had fulfilled all the functions of a parish church, but no person had a right to enter it without the permission of the vicar & churchwardens when it was not open for Divine service. The ct. found that apart from parishioners comparatively few persons had visited the church until about 1890, but since the War large numbers of persons had done so by the way in question & no one had ever been turned back. Owing to the increased use of the way notices were put up that visitors must keep to the path & not pick the flowers & that there would be no admission through the gate after 6 p.m. There was also a notice "No thoroughfare except to the church." In 1923 annoyance from visitors began & the gate was ordered to be locked after dusk, but no complaint was ever made, though some persons were actually prevented from going along the way to the church:—Held: on the evidence, the use of the way could properly be explained as having taken place by permission, & there was no reason why the ct. should presume from that use dedication to the public, & therefore the action failed.—A.-G. v. MALLOCK (1931), 146 L. T. 344; 48 T. L. R. 107; 30 L. G. R. 141.

had for forty years used a roadway at O. &, though there was some evidence of people being stopped or turned away, it was clear that in the majority of cases it had been used as a public highway without challenge. The owner had acquiesced in its inclusion in a town planning scheme as a public highway. No notice had been placed upon the way or served upon the local authority. No fence or gate had been erected to prevent its use before the end of 1934, & it was the removal of a fence or gateway then erected that was complained of in this case as an act of trespass:—Held: (1) upon the evidence, the roadway had been dedicated & used as a public highway; (2) “actually enjoyed by the public as of right” in Rights of Way Act, 1932 (c. 45), s. 1 (1), means actually enjoyed by the public as of right, & the exercise of such right has been actually suffered by the owner for the period of 20 years; (3) “as of right” in the same sub-sect. means in the exercise of a right vested in the public & not by permission of the owner from time to time given; (4) “without interruption” in the same sub-sect. means without actual & physical stopping of the enjoyment of the right; (5) defts. were entitled under Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (c. 61), s. 1 (b), to costs to be taxed between solr. & client.—*MERSTHAM MANOR, LTD. v. sd. Track leading to foreshore.]—A proprietor, who owned the foreshore ex adverso of his lands, brought an action of declarator that there existed no right of way over a track about a quarter of a mile in length leading from a public road to the foreshore. The track was held to have been part of a road extending to the foreshore which became a public road in 1819, but which ceased to be maintained at public expense in 1836. It was proved that from 1865 to 1934, when the proprietor first attempted to close the track, it had been used by the public as an access to the foreshore for the purposes of bathing & recreation. The evidence justified the inference that this use had extended as far back as 1836:—Held: (1) the track having been at one time a public road, the foreshore at its terminus had acquired the character of a public place which it had never lost; & further that, even if it was not established that the track had ever been part of a public road, the resort by the public to the foreshore for recreation had made the foreshore a public place prior to 1894, when the prescriptive period began; (2) the extent of the public use of the track throughout the prescriptive period was consistent, not with tolerance by the proprietor, but with the assertion of a right by the public.

Opinion, per Lord MONCRIEFF, that a public road could not lose its character as such merely by failure on the part of the road authority to maintain it & without resort by them to the statutory procedure for closing it.—BUTE (MARQUIS) v. M’KIRDY & CO., [1937] S. C. 93.—SCOT.

298a. — Paths joining existing highways.]—Evidence of long public user, as of right, of a pathway or roadway for the purpose of passing from one public place to another, is not the less ground for inferring dedication because recreation may have been the sole motive of such user.

H. & W. were neighbouring freeholders, & the sites of their properties originally formed part of the D. estate. The property of H. was originally let on a long lease in 1878 to one G., together with a right of way over a rough road, of the nature of a timber road, leading up from the London Road towards the property & past the property to Box Hill. In 1916 H. acquired the freehold of the property, & took a conveyance of the roadway in 1924. W., without the consent of H., opened a small gate for pedestrians in the boundary fence. In the action H. claimed a declaration that he was the freeholder of the said roadway & an injunction to restrain W. from trespassing thereon. Evidence was given of public user between Box Hill & the London Road for purposes of pleasure:—Held: the evidence of public user led to a presumption that the land had been dedicated, & that the motive of such user was irrelevant.—HUE v. WHITELEY, [1929] 1 Ch. 440; 98 L. J. Ch. 227; 140 L. T. 531.

But a plot of land included in the area was practically neglected for sixteen years, & was then handed over to the local authority's Parks Committee for use as an open space & was drained & gravelled. Later, a fountain & certain structures were erected on the plot, & the public used the plot freely & continuously. In or about 1928 the local authority wished to build a tuberculosis dispensary & offices on the plot, & the Minister of Health approved its appropriation for that purpose. In an action by the Attorney-General on relation for an injunction to restrain the local authority from building so as to interfere with the right of user & enjoyment of the plot by the public:—Held: the public had not acquired by user a public right of way over the plot; the public rights over the plot were general & to some extent precarious, & could be destroyed under Public Health Acts (Amendment) Act, 1907 (c. 53), s. 95.—*A.-G. v. when its direction continued on a line slanting inland, & during the course of some twenty years, owing to erosion by the sea, the footpath so used had receded about twenty or thirty feet inland, though the ct. was always slow to infer the dedication of a public right of way along a sea cliff, such a dedication could be here inferred, having regard to the fact that part of the footpath did not run along the sea cliff, & no objection to its user had been made by the owner of the land over which the footpath continued after leaving the sea cliff. Pltfs. having claimed that there was no public right of way over a strip of land under a portion of a fence removed by defts.:—Held: the public had wandered from the original right of way over the land of pltfs. when it was in the hands of their predecessor in title & was derelict, but the user of the new way by the public had never been acquiesced in, & there had never been a dedication of it to the public use, & pltfs. were entitled to a declaration that there was no such public right of way.—*BOULTRWOOD v. The alleged footpath led from the public road over part of the carriage drive to the hall, & then turned off through the park, leading to only three farms & three or four cottages, & by its use a distance of about sixty-four yards was saved. There was no evidence of dedication, & the evidence of user was by the occupants of the farms & cottages & their friends:—Held: the proof of uninterrupted user was no more than evidence from which the ct. could infer that at some time the owner of the soil had dedicated the path to the public of which there was no evidence, & the evidence of user was user by sufferance only since 1816, before which no such public footpath was shown to exist.—*FENWICK v. 345a. Under Rights of Way Act, 1932.]—JONES v. BATES, No. 333a, ante.

355a. ———.]—The purchaser of land sold "subject to rights of way," after an unsuspected right of way had been established on behalf of the public, brought an action against the vendor for breach of the implied covenants expressed by his having conveyed as "beneficial owner." The vendor's covenant being qualified, the question turned upon whether there had been dedication of the right subsequently to 1782, the date of the last purchase for value by those through whom the vendor claimed. Pltf. produced two tithe maps, made respectively in 1802 & 1840, in neither of which was the right of way marked:—Held: the tithe maps were made for a special purpose, & not for the purpose of showing public or private rights other than as regards tithe; they were not, therefore, prima facie evidence enabling pltf. to contend that the dedication was at a subsequent date, so as to shift upon deft. the onus of proving that the dedication was prior to 1782.—STONE v. 468a. ———.]—Pltfs. were owner & occupier respectively of a farm which pltf. Hinds had bought in Dec. 1918. They claimed that an unenclosed piece of land bordering the highway abutting on their land was part of the farm, & in 1936 they proceeded to fence it. Thereupon defts. by their servants or agents removed the fence, claiming the land to be roadside waste & part of the highway in relation to which defts. were the highway authority. The fence erected in 1936 was in a continuous line with fences on adjoining parts of the highway, but there was an old fence at a distance from the highway varying from 37 ft. to 99 ft. Evidence was given that animals had in the past strayed upon the land from the highway & that gypsies had encamped there. Defts. contended that, in the case of a highway running between fences, there is a presumption that the public right of way extends over the whole space of ground between the fences, & is not confined to the metalled portion, & that prima facie the fences are to be taken as having been originally put up for the purpose of separating land dedicated to the public as highway from land not so dedicated:—Held: (1) such a presumption would not be raised unless the circumstances were such as to make it reasonable to do so; (2) the circumstances in this case were such as did not raise such a presumption.—HINDS & DIPLOCK v. immediately adjoining the ditch belonged to ptlfs. In 1937, defts., without the consent or knowledge of ptlfs., laid pipes in a portion of the ditch & filled it in completely. They justified these acts on the grounds (i) that the portion of the ditch filled in was part of the highway, & (ii) that, if that were not so, the acts were within the scope of their statutory powers. The ditch clearly served the purpose of carrying off the overflow from a pond on ptlfs.' land & the surface-water from that land. It also carried off the surface-water from the road. At all times, the cleaning & repair of the ditch had been undertaken by ptlfs.:—Held: (1) the presumption that the ditch did not form part of the highway had not been rebutted, & the ditch was vested in ptlfs.; (2) the highway authority had no statutory power to fill in the ditch without the owner's consent, & ptlfs. were therefore entitled to a declaration of title & nominal damages.—*IFANSCOMBE v. 616a. ———. Trees.]—As owner of a house at C., which was bounded on the west & north by public highways known as Mill Lane & St. Andrew's Road respectively, ptlf. claimed the property in certain polled lime trees, proved to be about 110 years old, standing along the edge of the footpaths on the eastern & southern sides of those two highways. Ptlf. having refused to comply with defts.' notice to remove the trees on the ground that they were dangerous & obstructions to traffic & defts. having, in consequence of her refusal, themselves removed three of the trees in St. Andrew's Road, ptlf. brought this action, by which she claimed an injunction to restrain defts. from removing the remaining trees & for certain other relief. She claimed that the trees had been planted before the dedication of the roads as public highways, & that there had been excepted from such dedication the portions of the roads in which the trees were planted. There was no evidence of such restricted dedication as ptlf. asserted, but, on the contrary, evidence that the trees in both roads were planted in areas over which, as ancient highways, the public had rights of passage. It was proved that some of the trees were, through disease & decay, so unstable as to be an immediate danger to the public & a nuisance to the highway, erection of a portico resting upon pillars standing on the footpath. Ptlf., who was, subject to the statutory rights of the municipality, the owner of the soil of the highway, claimed a mandatory injunction ordering its demolition & damages, basing his action upon a trespass to his property in the land:—Held: although the municipality under the statute took only a restricted interest in the street sufficient to safeguard its use as a highway, they had power to sanction the erection of the portico, & ptlf. had no right of action in trespass. The Ct. expressed no opinion as to ptlf.'s right to complain of the portico as a nuisance in a properly constituted action.—SEWAI JAIPUR v. ARJUN LAL, that others threatened to become a similar danger at short notice, & that the rest, including the three trees which defts. had removed, were a danger to traffic & a nuisance. On Aug. 16, 1920, the boundary of the borough of New Windsor was altered so as to include the parish of C. (Without), & it was admitted that the two roads were highways repairable by the inhabitants at large:—Held: (1) the roads were ancient highways upon which, after dedication to the public use, the trees were planted; (2) even assuming pltf. had property in the trees, defts. as to those trees which had been proved to be a nuisance to the highway, had not merely a right but a duty to remove them, & as to the remaining trees, they were entitled to remove them as being obstructions to the rights of the public over the entire width of the roads, which were not limited to the use of the carriageways; (3) the trees, as being parts of the "streets" or as produce of the soil thereof, vested under Public Health Act, 1875, in & came under the control of defts. as the highway authority, with the result that pltf. was not in a position to complain, & her action failed.—*STILLWELL v. In a case where a public carriage road was built upon a raised viaduct resting upon open arches & descending to the ground level upon embankments:—Held: (1) vesting of the road included (a) the whole masonry & structure of the viaduct, together with such soil as it actually occupied, (b) the soil of the embankments; but not (c) the soil lying beneath & between the arches of the viaduct. The local authority, however, was entitled to a right of access to the latter at all times for the purpose of inspection & maintenance; (2) such right of access was not forfeited by laches or acquiescence on the part of the local authority where it was

He drove across the pavement into a courtyard forming part of the premises of the National Provincial Bank, there being no evidence of any other means of access to the courtyard from the highway. The footway was not constructed to allow of vehicular traffic crossing it, & there was a kerb six inches high. There were no pedestrians on the footway at the time, & the right of passage by the public was not interfered with. Applt. was an employee of the bank authorised to drive the car into the courtyard. There was no evidence either as to the ownership of the footway or of any prior user of the courtyard for vehicular traffic:—Held: since access to the courtyard by vehicles was not shown to be essential to any user of the premises, the magistrate was entitled to convict.—*CURTIS v. Appls., proprietors of motor coaches, were owners of land bounded by a wall & abutting upon a street which was partly a footpath & partly a carriage-way. The footpath ran along the wall, & the carriage-way ran along the footpath. Appls., being minded to open a passage for vehicles from their land across the footpath & so into the carriage-way, submitted to resps. a plan of the proposed works in accordance with the above enactment, & applied to them to sanction the works. Resps. found no fault with the proposed works as works, but they refused to sanction them, having regard to the safety of the public & the convenience of pedestrians & vehicular traffic which might use the highway:—Held: resps. were not authorised by the above sect. to take these matters into consideration in deciding whether to give their sanction to the proposed works; for the owner of land adjoining a highway has at common law a right of access to any part of the highway unless some statute has deprived him of the right, which sect. 62 of the Blackpool Improvement Act, 1879, did not purport to do.—*MARSHALL v. #### 645a. Restriction on development—Compensation.]

—On Sept. 24, 1935, the claimants made proposals for the development of certain land as a housing estate, which proposals were afterwards withdrawn. On Nov. 5, 1935, the claimants submitted other proposals, to which consent was given, & which were unaffected by the restrictions imposed by the Act of 1935, so as to exclude any claim to compensation. The claimants sought to recover compensation, on the basis that the earlier proposals were proposals "at the date of the claim to compensation" which was made on Jan. 6, 1936:—Held: as the earlier proposals for the development of the land were not proposals immediately practicable "at the date of the claim to compensation" within the meaning of sect. 9 (1) of the Act of 1935, the claimants were not entitled to the compensation claimed.—MELKSHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. WILTSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, [1937] 4 All E. R. 142; 102 J. P. 38; 35 L. G. R. 632, D. C.

Another bridge was built by a local authority within one mile of the co.'s bridge, & a co. owning motor omnibuses made use of the new bridge for the purpose of conveying passengers & goods across the river in motor omnibuses:—Held: the motor omnibus co. had not substituted as a means of taking persons & articles across the river some means of conveyance other than the co.'s bridge & had not, therefore, contravened the provisions of the statute, & accordingly the proprietors of the old bridge were not entitled to an injunction restraining the motor omnibus co. from conveying passengers & goods across the new bridge.—*LOFTSOME BRIDGE CO. 795a. Retaining wall—Repair sufficient to support highway.—A highway, vested in deft. corpn. & situated on an incline, was supported by a retaining-wall, which was extended upwards above the road to the height of about 2 ft. 6 ins. as a fence-wall. The whole wall was a dry wall, the stones not being cemented together. *Pltf.*s. were the owners of property immediately adjoining the retaining-wall, & wished to erect new buildings on their land. There was evidence that there had been some minor collapses of parts of the wall in recent years. In the course of adapting the road to modern traffic conditions, defts. had raised the level of its surface, & it was contended that such raising had increased the pressure on the wall, & that, the wall not having been strengthened, this was an act of misfeasance. A declaration was asked that this wall was a public or private nuisance, & that defts. be ordered to abate such nuisance:—Held: (1) the wall was not a public or private nuisance, as there was no indication that it was in a dangerous condition; (2) the position that a highway authority is not liable for non-feasance has not been altered as to main roads by Local Government Act, 1929 (c. 17); (3) the only duty of the highway authority was to keep the wall in a state of repair sufficient to support the highway, & there was no duty upon it to reconstruct the wall in accordance with the best modern engineering practice; (4) the raising of the level of the road was not, in the circumstances, an act of misfeasance, as it was not proved to have weakened the wall in any way; (5) the raising of the level of the road was not an act of misfeasance, although the fence-wall had thereby been reduced in height.—A.-G. & TAYLOR & SON, LTD. v. TODMORDEN BOROUGH COUNCIL, [1937] 4 All E. R. 588.

1146a. — Removal of footway.—A municipal corpn., in exercise of its powers as highway authority under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 149, widened a narrow street in the town by entirely removing a raised & kerbed footway on one side, & throwing its site into the carriage-way without any notice to or consent of the owner of the adjoining house & premises, who was also owner of one-half of the soil of the road. The owner brought an action in the county ct. for a mandatory order to restore the footway, & for damages for injury to his property. It was proved that the access to & egress from the property through doors in a garden wall was rendered inconvenient & dangerous by the removal of the footway, & the county ct. judge granted a mandatory injunction to defts. to restore the footway to a width of 1 ft. less than before:—Held: the county ct. judge had rightly directed himself in law, & there was evidence upon which he was entitled to find that the action of defts. in removing the footway was unreasonable & arbitrary, & it was not sufficient for the action to be bona fide; & the order was properly made.—*HOWARD-FLANDERS v. Pltf. drove his car after dark down a public road leading straight into the new road under construction, & not seeing the fence in time, which had no red lamp or other warning of danger upon it, & was not watched, drove through it & fell with his car into the ravine, sustaining serious personal injury & damage to the car:—Held: the corp., being in occupation of the land under construction as a new road, pltf. was not a trespasser upon private property, but an invitee, to whom they owed a duty to warn of any hidden danger; the unlighted fence was in the circumstances a concealed trap, & pltf. not being guilty of contributory negligence, defts. were liable to him in damages for negligence.—OLDHAM v. SHEP-FIELD CORPN. (1927), 136 L. T. 681; 91 J. P. 69; 43 T. L. R. 222; 25 L. G. R. 94, C. A.

Defts. in execution of a housing scheme were laying out a new road running eastwards from a certain highway & closed at its eastern end by a quickset hedge. Footpaths had already been laid out & edged with kerbstones; houses were being built on the northern side & heaps of earth & building materials made the footpath on this side impassable; the footpath on the south side was still unfinished, but was traversable; it was bounded by a fence of wooden posts & bars; the middle of the road was levelled but not metalled; across it, for laying an electric cable, defts. had cut a trench which they left unfenced & by night unlighted. They did not prevent persons, whether intending occupiers of houses or others, from walking down the new road. Pltf. on a Sept. evening, while there was still daylight, walked with a companion down the highway & into the new road along the southern footpath. Through a gap in the fence they were five or six days before the accident & made no attempt to remove the danger:—Held: the city corp. were guilty of gross negligence within Consolidated Municipal Act, 1922, s. 460 (3), & were liable.—*COKERS v. The place of crossing was in a dangerous condition, by reason of the tracks not being ballasted but simply resting upon exposed sleepers. The car was imprisoned there & run into by a street car, & pltf. were injured & the car damaged:—Held: the city corp. were liable since, although no obligation to repair existed, there was a trap or concealed danger.—*JAMES v. In an action against defenders, as the local authority charged, under Edinburgh Municipal & Police Act, 1879, with the lighting of the streets, it was proved that a red lamp situated on the island was not lit at the time of the accident. It was also established that defenders had not failed in their duty with respect either to the construction & condition of the lamp, or to the precautions taken to ensure that it should remain alight during the hours of darkness:—Held: the standard of performance could not be absolute, but must be relative to the best available means of achieving exact performance, & in the absence of evidence of any failure on the part of defenders to take every reasonable means of carrying out their statutory obligations, they fell to be absolved.—*KEOGH v. 5a. Right to rebate—Basis of calculation.—Resp. village, an urban municipality within appt. county, was subject by statute to an annual general levy by the council of the county for county road purposes. Under a provision of an Ontario statute of 1926, repealed & re-enacted as sect. 28 (5) of Highway Improvement Act, R. S. If, therefore, a drain placed in the road solely for the purpose of draining the roadway is broken, the omission to repair it gives no cause of action to a person passing along the highway who is injured in consequence of the omission. But the rule does not apply to drains or other artificial works placed there for purposes foreign to the road considered as a highway, such as sewers for drainage of adjoining land & the like, & a highway authority which is also a drainage authority is liable for failing to keep in a safe condition drains introduced into the roadway by it in its latter capacity.—*BUCKLE v. 1260 xxv. —.—.—A break in a water main of deft. city having occurred about Jan. 22, the city made a cut in the granolithic sidewalk at that point & excavated the earth to the water pipe. The excavated earth & some gravel were thrown back into the hole, & beginning about the following Apr. 10, the excavated surface was kept under observation for subsidence, but it was not until about the following July 5 that the city's department in charge of resurfacing sidewalks was requested to act, & from Apr. 10 to July 9 there was a subsidence of about 24 inches & on nine occasions refilling was found necessary. On the intervening June 5 pltf. wife tripped, in a hole in the excavation area where a subsidence of four or five inches had taken place, & was injured. She had passed over the place in question many times, the latest, earlier on the evening of the accident. The trial judge found that the delay in repairing the sidewalk was intentional & due to the awaiting of such a rainfall or rainfalls as would in the opinion of some official cause a final settlement. The expert testimony was that now the curing & placing of cement may be done in winter months at a cost but little greater than at other seasons:—Held: said testimony had not been reasonably met & could not be ignored as merely theoretical; & aside from it, the city should be held negligent in delaying the repair work beyond Apr. or May.—*BRENNAN v. Over the ditch was a culvert 24 feet long, which was covered in by road material, except for a space of about two feet at each end. Deft. was under a statutory duty to keep its roads, culverts, etc., "in a reasonable state of repair, having regard to the character of the road, culvert . . . & the locality in which the same is situated," & the statute made it liable for damages sustained by reason of default in carrying out that duty. Pltf. alleged that his injuries were caused by deft.'s negligence in allowing the ditch to become filled with growing weeds & grasses which obscured it, & in not erecting signals or barriers around the ditch:—Held: the village was not negligent in constructing the ditch & maintaining it in the condition in which it was at the time of the accident.—*BARTOK v. The judge held that the platform was a "trap," because of the fact that it differed very little in colour, if at all, from the rest of the highway; & he awarded pltf. damages. Def't. appealed:—Held: the appeal should be allowed, since the platform was properly placed, & there was no evidence that def't.'s failure to furnish more light at or near the platform than it did supply or to paint the platform amounted to misfeasance which left the highway in disrepair. —

1266a. Non-repair of traffic stud.—Pltf. whilst cycling along a road in defts.' area reached a line of traffic studs at the same time as a motor-car. As the car passed her one of the studs which had become loose shot out & struck her bicycle with such force as to overturn it, & pltf. was thrown to the ground & injured. The studs were inserted in the road by defts. as the highway authority under the powers conferred on them by Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43), s. 48, for the purpose of regulating the traffic, & there was evidence that the particular stud had been defective for some time. In an action brought by pltf. for damages for personal injury defts. contended that the stud formed part of the highway, & that pltf. had not proved misfeasance, for which alone a highway authority could be held liable:—Held: assuming, but without deciding, that the stud was physically part of the highway, the placing therein of the stud in such a manner that it became defective amounted to the placing of a nuisance on the highway, & defts. could not take advantage of the cases which dealt with maintenance of the highway, because the stud was not brought on to the highway as part of the maintenance of the highway under the Highway Act, 1835 (c. 50), but for the purposes of traffic direction under the powers conferred on defts. by Road Traffic Act, 1930 (c. 43).—*SKILTON v. The barricade & the pile of earth occupied so much of the sidewalk that a path only 18 inches wide was left behind the barricade for the use of pedestrians. Owing to ordinary rainfall & the moist character of the earth so piled up, there was a seepage of water carrying slimy particles of clay through the spaces between the planks resulting in the surface of the pathway becoming dangerously muddy & slippery. r (p. 408) v. —.—.—Slippery sidewalk.—Deft. municipality is a mining centre. The topographical features are rough & rugged & great changes in elevation occur in a very short distance. Because of the practically prohibitive expense of putting the sewer pipes underground they are carried on the surface along the front of the lots & boxed in. The top planking of the boxing is used as a sidewalk or footpath. Because of the elevation of houses above roadways steep narrow stairways of different heights had been constructed to permit householders to reach the roadways. The top step was at the boxing (or sidewalk). There had been removal of rock in front of a house in an attempt at levelling for road purposes & this removal had caused a drop that necessitated such steps. At the point in question there were five wooden steps, including the top step & one on the ground. The top step was about 5 ft. in length & the lower ones about 4 ft. The vertical height was about 3 ft. From the top of these steps pltf. fell on an evening in March. The light was good & there was no hindrance of vision. Pltf., who was carrying certain articles, knew the locality. TAYLOR, J., found that the steps were not of faulty construction but also found that their slippery condition was the cause of the accident & therefore, gave judgment for pltf.—Held: although it could not be said that the trial judge's finding as to the construction of the steps was against the evidence, yet, on the other hand, the mere fact, if it were a fact, that the sidewalk or steps were slippery did not prove negligence on the part of deft. & did not even impose on deft. the onus of explanation, & since the onus which rested on pltf. of proving negligence had not been discharged, the action must be dismissed.—*MCMANARA v. sn. Areas forming part of side-walk—Left uncovered.]—On a dark night one of pltf.'s, wife of her co-pltf., stepped into an area, one of several, in the sidewalk of a street in a town & was injured. The areas were constructed as part of a building adjacent to the sidewalk & were for the benefit of the owners or tenants of the building. No authorisation by the town corpn. for the construction of the areas was shown, but it appeared that, since the year 1900, the corpn. had looked after the coverings of the areas, treating them as part of the side-walk. Before the accident, the area into which pltf. stepped had been covered with a plank, but on the night of the accident it was uncovered:—Held: the town corpn., having knowl-edge of the condition, & having taken no steps to close the areas, or to see that they were adequately protected, were liable to pltf.—McMICHAEL v. sw. Fall of post—Negligence—Lim-itation of action.]—A wooden signpost erected by deft. city on a boulevard near a street corner fell & injured pltf. as she was walking towards her au-tomobile after visiting friends who lived near the highway. The part of the boulevard where the post stood was away from the travelled part of the highway or street. The city was found to have been negligent in not repairing the post:—Held: the case was not one of nuisance, the post in situ did not interfere with the public's use of the highway & pltf. was not on city prop-erty when the post fell; the case was one of negligence to repair within the meaning of sect. 26 of Vancouver Incorporation Act, 1921, Amendment Act, 1936, c. 68, & since the action had not been brought within the three months limited thereby it must be dismissed.—LONG v. Originally the top of the fireplug had been level with the pavement, but in consequence of the ordinary wearing away of the footpath the fireplug projected half an inch above the level of the pavement. The fireplug itself was in perfect repair. Pltf., whilst passing along the footpath, fell over the fireplug & was hurt:—Held: as the fireplug was in good repair, & had been lawfully fixed in the footpath, no action by pltf. would lie against defts.—*MOORE v. 1372a. Liability of water company.]—A water co., at the request & expense of the owner of a house, laid down a service pipe leading from their main under the street into the house, in which they placed a stop-cock for the purpose of regulating the supply of water. This stop-cock was protected by a cover or guard-box let into the pavement, which was provided with a lid or flap. Owing to the hinge of the lid or flap being out of repair, it projected above the pavement, & pltf. while passing along the street tripped over it & sustained injury. The apparatus could not be repaired without being removed, or removed without breaking up the pavement. The jury found that there was negligence on the part of those who were liable for the repair of the hinge:—Held: the co., who alone had power to break up the street for the purpose of repairing the guard-box, were responsible for its repair, & liable in respect of the injuries sustained by pltf.—*CHAPMAN v. 1384a. —.]—Deft. acquired certain property adjoining the towpath along the River Thames. The conveyance described the property as bounded by the towpath, & proceeded to give deft. a right of way over the towpath. Deft., it was alleged, had suffered annoyance from the use of the towpath by persons bringing motor cars, ice-cream barrows & other vehicles thereon. To prevent this he erected upon the towpath posts about 3 ft. apart. The conservators had erected similar posts at the other end of the path. It was contended that (a) the property in the towpath had passed to deft. under the conveyance, & (b) the public were so benefited by the erection of the posts that they could not complain of them as a nuisance:—Held: (1) upon the construction of the conveyance the towpath did not pass thereunder to the deft., as a person cannot be granted a right of way over his own land; (2) the benefit to the public by the prevention of the vehicular traffic was not a sufficient justification for the obstruction, & an injunction against such obstruction ought to be granted.—*A.-G. v. 1384b. Bollard on refuge—Failure to light.]—An illuminated bollard at one end of a tram refuge had been damaged in an accident. Deft. council had placed a light upon it, but this light had, for some unexplained reason, gone out. As a result of this, pltf.'s motor car collided with the bollard, & pltf. was injured:—Held: deft. council, having erected the refuge & bollards, were under a continuing duty to keep them adequately lighted. They were, therefore, liable to pltf. in respect of the injury he had sustained.—POLKINGHORN v. LAMBETH BOROUGH COUNCIL, [1938] 1 All E. R. 339; 158 L. T. 127; 102 J. P. 131; 54 T. L. 1408a. Subsidence of filled-in trench.]—In July, 1933, defts., who were the local sanitary authority as well as the local highway authority, had made a trench in a highway for the purpose of executing certain drainage work. The excavation was filled in, & in 1935, when the surface was tar-sprayed & chippings were rolled in with a steam-roller, the surface was said to be level. In 1936, a depression had formed at the place where the work had been done, & the jury found that the highway at this place was dangerous to those using it with due care. The jury also found that, although the original work was executed without negligence, the dangerous condition was due to the work of defts., & that defts. were negligent in not discovering & taking steps to remedy the danger. Pltf., having been thrown from his bicycle & injured by reason of the subsidence of the road at the place in question, brought an action against defts. as the authority responsible for the repair of the road:—Held: there was a duty on defts. as the sanitary authority to make good the inevitable subsidence resulting from their work in 1933. They were negligent in not discovering, & in not taking steps to remedy, the danger, & this negligence amounted to misfeasance.—NEWSOME v. DARTON URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, [1938] 3 All E. 1435a. Street traders—Licence—Application to renew—Duties of borough council.—(1) The remedy by appeal to petty sessions given by London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1927 (c. xxii.), s. 35 (2), to a street trader who is aggrieved by the refusal of the renewal of his licence as a street trader is equally beneficial, convenient & effectual as mandamus would be. Mandamus will therefore not lie to a Metropolitan borough council to compel them to hear & determine a street trader's application for renewal of a licence.

(2) In deciding such applications, the council is an administrative body, not a judicial one; it may therefore properly take into account a report of a committee, & its decision will not be invalidated merely by the fact that some members taking part in it were not present at an earlier meeting when the applicant was heard.

He did not hold a licence. He was charged & convicted of selling the ice-cream from a "receptacle occupying a stationary position" contrary to sect. 30 of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1927. The proviso to the sect. enacted that it should not apply to a person selling, etc., any article from any receptacle which he ordinarily moved from place to place in pursuit of & while conducting his trade:—Held: the proviso applied & no offence had been committed.—*TAYLOR v. st. Use of street as golf course.—Part of the golf course used by deft. club was land which was shown on a registered plan of subdivision as a street. Under the governing legislation, the dedication of said land as a public street was effective forthwith on registration of the plan. The street was never graded or used as a street, & there were golf tees, greens, etc., thereon. After the street had been so used for a number of years, pltf. bought a tract of land bounded by the street & erected a small house thereon in which he lived. Pltf. complained that many golf balls were driven on to his property & that players trespassed thereon in search of the balls & that he was obstructed by said use by the club of said land in his right to use it as a public street. Pltf. asked for damages

& an order for the removal of the tees, etc., as against both the golf club & the municipality & for an injunction restraining the club's members from playing on the street:—Held: the club should be enjoined against using the street as part of its golf course & ordered to restore it to its normal state.—*CHISWELL v. The cart remained standing, sometimes for a period of over half an hour, until the last of the customers was served, & the trader then moved on. 1435h. One day licence.—Resp. sold apples from a barrow in a street within the Metropolitan Borough of P. It was the custom of the P. Borough Council to issue one-day licences to street traders, but though resp. had been issued with several of these licences in the past, he was not in possession of one on the day in question. He was summoned for selling goods from a barrow without a licence contrary to L.C.C. (General Powers) Act, 1927, s. 39. The magistrate dismissed the summons on the ground that the borough council having granted a licence, they could dispute its validity; & also upon the ground that the prosecution was instituted to test the system of one-day licences & was not bona fide:—Held: licences could only be granted in accordance with the provisions of the Act, & any licence issued otherwise was invalid. Resp. had not therefore a valid licence & ought to have been convicted.—DENNIS v. WILLMORE, [1936] 2 All E. R. 407, D. C.

It was contended that the employer had been negligent in allowing his lorry to go on the road driven by a man suffering from such a latent disability, or that the lorry in such circumstances amounted to a nuisance:—Held: (1) the employer had not been negligent, & the man appeared to be in good health, & medical examination would not have disclosed any defect. He was not, moreover, under any obligation to have the driver medically examined; (2) there was no defect in the lorry, & it was not a nuisance; (3) the accident was due to an act of God.—*RYAN v. that the constable had left his post, & further, it did not appear so clearly that the proximate cause of the accident was the negligence of the constable that the action must be dismissed as against the other two defendants, & also, per Lord Anderson, in respect that both the road authority & the proprietrix must be held to have delegated their duties to the constable & therefore to be responsible for his negligence. It was for the jury to decide whether the child had been guilty of contributory negligence.—STEVENSON v. EDINBURGH MAGISTRATES, [1934] S. C. 226.—SCOT.

1761a. Duty of local authority—On request to exercise statutory powers.]—A local authority, requested to carry out in a "street laid out but not dedicated" constructive works under its statutory powers, need not necessarily inquire into the title of those making the request. But it must, in considering whether compliance with the request will be a lawful exercise of the powers, have regard primarily to the physical conditions obtaining in the area of the proposed operations; & those physical conditions will be one of the principal factors in determining whether relevant statutory definitions are complied with. This applies to powers conferred by either public general or private local statutes.—DAVIES v. RIPON CORPN., [1928] Ch. 884; 97 L. J. Ch. 479; 139 L. T. 636; 92 J. P. 153; 26 L. G. R. 530.

1775a. —.]—Defts., who owned & used traction engines for the purposes of their business, drove two of these engines on a very hot day in July over a highway belonging to pltfs., who were the highway authority for the district. The highway, which had been constructed as a first class main road for the purpose of bearing traffic of all sorts, had a mexphalte surface. In passing along the most exposed part of the highway, the driving wheels of these engines sank into the road at a point where the surface was very soft, with the result that the road was damaged. Pltfs. thereupon brought an action against defts. to recover extraordinary expenses, pursuant to Highways & Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (c. 77), s. 23, as amended by Locomotives Act, 1898 (c. 29), s. 12. They also claimed damages for wrongful abuse of the highway by defts. & for nuisance & negligence:—Held: as agricultural traffic, including heavy traction engines, was admittedly part of the ordinary traffic, & the weights in the present case were normal, no claim for excessive weight or for extraordinary traffic could arise under the Act of 1878; there was no excess whatever by defts. of the lawful use of the highway & no wrongful abuse of their rights of passing & repassing; the injury to the highway was due to a peculiar & unique conjunction of heat & of atmospheric & other conditions; defts.' vehicles did not constitute a nuisance, & there was no negligence on the part of defts.—EASTBOURNE COUNTY BOROUGH v. FULLER & SONS (1928), 93 J. P. 29; 72 Sol. Jo. 762.

1985a. ———.]—A ry. co. were empowered by Act of Parliament to stop up a certain street for the purpose of providing additional warehouses. The co. stopped up & enclosed part of such street & formed a cul-de-sac. They constructed a warehouse abutting upon the pavement in such cul-de-sac. The warehouse had flaps which opened across such pavement, & for forty years the co. loaded & unloaded goods from such flaps across the pavement into & from vans standing in the cul-de-sac from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. daily. The London County Council by a private Act, which incorporated the Lands Clauses Acts, were empowered to make a new street, & they gave notice to treat for certain premises in the possession of the ry. co. The new street included the pavement above referred to. The co. claimed compensation (inter alia) for injurious affection of the above-mentioned warehouse by reason of the works of the council preventing them from delivering goods from the warehouse across the pavement to vans in the way they had therefore done:—Held: the use which the ry. co. had made of the pavement amounted to a stopping up of such pavement under their statutory powers above referred to, although such pavement had not been enclosed; the council were bound to acquire an easement over such pavement for the purpose of making the new street, & the co. were entitled to compensation for injurious affection of the warehouse.—Re GREAT EASTERN RY. 1988a. On liability to repair.—A part of an old footpath, repairable by the inhabitants at large, was diverted & the substituted highway was a road 60 feet wide. All the usual steps were taken under Highways Act, 1835 (c. 50), in respect of the diversion, except that at no time did the justices view the new highway in accordance with sect. 91 of the Act. From 1911 the old highway had been built over and the new highway continuously used. Two frontagers claimed a declaration that the new highway was repairable by the inhabitants at large:—Held: (1) the proper proceedings to test this question were proceedings in a ct. of summary jurisdiction under the Private Streets Works Act, 1892 (c. 57); (2) this was not a proper case for the ct. in the exercise of its discretion to make a declaration; (3) the Attorney-General was not a necessary party to the action; (4) the substituted highway would not be repairable by the inhabitants at large until Highways Act, 1835 (c. 50), s. 91, had been complied with; (5) it could not be assumed in a recent case that all formalities had been complied

A new street was made parallel to F. street, of which the dead wall at the end of B.'s garden was part of the line of street. This new street was a mews which the metropolitan board allowed to be made of 20 feet width:—Held: the consent of the metropolitan board to the mews being of 20 feet did not require to be given under the seal of the board.—*PADDINGTON VESTRY v. 2178a. Proceedings for removal—Whether restrained by injunction.—Pltf., having purchased certain premises in the metropolis, erected buttresses for the purpose of improving the wall abutting on the highway. The local authority took out a summons before a magistrate against pltf. under Metropolis

Management Act, 1855 (c. 120), s. 119, to compel pltf. to remove the buttresses, on the ground that they were an encroachment on the highway. Pltf., alleging that the site of the buttresses was not part of the highway, then brought an action against the local authority & moved for an injunction to restrain them from interfering with the buttresses & from going on with the proceedings before the magistrate to determine any questions to be determined in the action:—Held: though the ct. had jurisdiction to restrain proceedings before a magistrate if it was satisfied that he had no jurisdiction or that owing to the special circumstances the proceedings before the magistrate ought not to be allowed, yet in the present case, as the magistrate had jurisdiction, & as there were no special circumstances, the motion must be dismissed.—*WILLIAMS v. Therefore a charge, framed under sect. 75 of the Act of 1817, of setting up dead shores in a public street without a licence, failed, the same offence, with different penalties & procedure, being dealt with in sects. 122 & 123 of the later Act.

2204a. — Recovery of expenses of repairing dangerous structure—London Building Act, 1894, s. 116—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (c. 43), s. 11.—A building in the metropolis having been certified to be dangerous, the county council did the work necessary to make it safe, & on Sept. 15, 1924, demanded from the owner the amount of the expenses. The amount not having been paid, the council on Jan. 1, 1926, applied to a magistrate under sect. 116 (1) of the above Act of 1894 to fix the amount of the expenses & to make an order that no part of the structure should be let for occupation until after payment thereof. The magistrate dismissed the complaint on the ground that more than the period of six months limited by sect. 11 of the above Act of 1848 had elapsed between the time when the matter of the complaint arose & the date when the complaint was made:—Held: the six months' limitation of time applied to proceedings under sect. 116 (1) of the Act of 1891, & the time ran from the date of the demand, & the magistrate's decision must be affirmed.—*LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. In 1904 her husband became the tenant of a field to the south of & adjoining the house & land. The field fronted on E. road. In 1907 deft. purchased the field, but entered into a tenancy agreement letting it to her husband, & from that time the field & the house & land had been separately assessed by the local authority though in fact the tenancy agreement between deft. & her husband ceased to exist about 1918. In 1920 E. road was made up, the usual course being followed under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), ss. 150 & 257, with the result that plffs. claimed a charge, for the admitted proportion due from deft. of the expenses incurred in making up E. road, on the whole of deft.'s property, including her house & grounds as well as the field, as fronting, adjoining or abutting on E. road:—Held: the house & grounds & the field must be considered as being one close, & as such the whole was liable to a charge for making up E. road as fronting, adjoining or abutting thereon.—ALTRINCHAM URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. O'BRIEN (1927), 91 J. P. 149; 25 L. G. R. 369.

2279a. — Asphalt in place of flags.—The predecessors of resp. corpn. by notice adopted H. Road under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 152. In accordance with the provisions of Public Health Act, 1925 (c. 71), resps. prepared a list of roads repairable by the inhabitants at large. H. Road was therein stated to be repairable by the local authority as to the carriageway, but not as to the footway. There was some evidence that the road had never been made up. Resps. were empowered by a local Act to serve notice upon the frontagers to make, curb, flag, & complete the footway, & if through the frontagers' default, they executed the work themselves, to apportion the whole cost on the frontagers in the case of a road not repairable by the inhabitants at large, & half the cost in the case of a road repairable by the inhabitants at large. Such notice was served in respect of H. Road &, resps. having done the work, apportioned the whole cost on the frontagers. The notices required the frontagers to make, flag & complete, but in fact the resps. did not flag the road, but asphalted it:—Held: (1) H. Road was a road repairable by the inhabitants at large &, in any event, resps. could only recover half the cost; (2) the work specified in the notice must be carried out & the use of asphalt in place of flags was not a proper compliance with the notice, & resps. could not recover the cost of the work done.—*FINNEY v. 2322a. — Under local Act.]—By the C. Corpn. Act, 1884, s. 39, it is provided that whenever the corpn. put in force the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 150, "they may before themselves executing any works as therein provided recover in a summary manner the amount of the estimated cost thereof from the owners in default." On June 27, 1935, the local authority served a notice, under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 150, upon resp., the owner of premises fronting on a certain road, requiring him to do certain street works. On June 28, 1935, resp. conveyed the premises to a third person. On Oct. 4, 1935, the local authority served a notice upon resp., under C. Corpn. Act, 1884, s. 39, demanding payment of certain sums in respect of the estimated cost of the works, which works had not then been executed. Resp. refused to pay any part of the amount claimed & the local authority thereupon on Dec. 20, 1935, lodged a complaint claiming payment. The magistrates were of opinion that there could be no default until the expiration of the time given in the notice to repair, & that as at the expiration of that time resp. was no longer the owner of the premises, resp. was not the "owner in default" within C. Corpn. Act, 1884, s. 39, & they held that he was not liable to pay the amount claimed. The local authority appealed:—Held: "owner" in the C. Corpn. Act, 1884, s. 39, referred to the owner at the time of the service of the notice to execute the street works, & if such owner failed to execute the works, he became & remained for the purposes of that sect. the "owner in default," notwithstanding a conveyance of the property to a third person. Resp. was therefore liable to pay the amount claimed by the local authority.—CROYDON CORPN. v. OLDAKER, [1937] 1 K. B. 337; [1936] 3 All E. R. 369; 106 L. J. K. B. 190; 155 L. T. 557; 100 J. The arbitrator in his award varied the surveyor's apportionment by abating the amount payable by resp. by the sum attributable to his con-

Thereafter the council brought an action against them to recover half the cost of the work:—Held: the words "the owner for the time being" in Local Government Act, 1919, s. 243, meant the owner at the time of the commencement of the action, & therefore that defts. were not liable.—*ULMARRA MUNICIPAL COUNCIL v. The local authority thereupon made the order asked. The street was described both in the application & in the order as: 1–15 inclusive, Front Newbottle Row. It was proved in evidence that the street in question so far as Nos. 1–5 abutted upon it was not within the area of the local authority:—Held: as part of the street was outside the area of the local authority & the order referred to the whole street, the order was ultra vires & invalid. It was impossible to sever the application & the order & treat the order as valid so far as the street was within the area of the local authority.—*NEWTON v. 2401a. ——— Used for deposit of ashes.—By Carlisle Corp. Act, 1887, s. 192, it was provided that "No ry. co. shall be deemed to be an owner or occupier in respect of any land of such co. upon which any street shall wholly or partially front or abut & which shall be used by such co. solely as part of their line of railway or sidings & shall have no direct communication with such street & the expenses incurred by the corpn. under the powers of the Public Health Acts . . . shall be paid by the other owners having frontages abutting on such street . . .":—Held: land used by a ry. co. for the purpose of depositing ashes thereon did not fall within the exemption contained in that sect.

I am of opinion Mr. Macmorran's argument cannot prevail. Indeed, had it been addressed to me upon sect. 22 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, I should have doubted much whether this land had been used by the ry. co. solely for the purposes of their line of railway, sidings, station or works (PHILLMORE, J.).—Re CARLISLE CORPN. & SAUL'S EXORS. (1907), 71 J. 2405b. Vacant land adjoining chapel.—An objection was made by the trustees of a chapel to the inclusion in a provisional apportionment under Private Street Works Act, 1892 (c. 57), of certain vacant land adjoining the chapel, on the ground that the land was exempt from expenses under sect. 16 of that Act & Poor Rate Exemption Act, 1833 (c. 30), s. 1. The trustees were owners of the land, & at the time of the provisional apportionment it was their intention to erect a Sunday school thereon communicating by a corridor with the chapel:—Held: the land was not exempt from expenses as a "place" or "premises" exclusively appropriated to religious worship within the above Acts, as the words "place" & "premises" refer to buildings only, & cannot include a piece of vacant land; & there was no evidence on which it could be held that the land was within the curtilage of or formed part of the site of the chapel.—*ILFORD CORPN. v. 2413a. ——— Premises not adjoining—Discretion of local authority.—An urban authority, acting under sects. 6 & 10 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892 (c. 57), resolved that the expenses of certain works which were to be carried out should "be apportioned on the premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting on such street . . . regard being had to the greater or less degree of benefit to be derived by any premises from such works." The authority did not resolve, under the last part of sect. 10, to include any premises which did not front, adjoin, or abut on the street. Objections having been taken under sect. 7 of the Act to the proposals of the authority by certain owners of premises affected thereby, the justices who heard the objections under sect. 8 of the Act directed that certain premises which did not front, adjoin, or abut on the street should be included in the provisional apportionment:—Held: the statute empowered the urban authority alone, as a matter of discretion & policy, to decide whether or not premises which did not front, adjoin, or abut on the street should be included in the apportionment, & the justices, in the absence of a resolution by the authority that such premises should be included, had no jurisdiction on the hearing of objections to the apportionment to amend the apportionment by directing that they should be included.—*HORNCHURCH URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. They passed no resolution either under Public Health Act, 1925 (c. 71), s. 35 for varying the relative widths of the carriage-way & footways of the street—namely, a 24 ft. carriageway with two 8 ft. footways, nor under Private Street Works Act, 1892 (c. 57), s. 15, to contribute any part of the expenses. The road was one which was used both by local & through traffic. The justices having dismissed objections by certain frontagers, they appealed to quarter sessions, & the appeal committee, being of opinion that a 20 ft. carriageway would suffice for the needs of the local traffic, quashed the resolution & apportionment on the ground that it was unreasonable to cast on the frontagers the greater burden rendered necessary for the through traffic from which they derived no benefit:—Held: the burden is cast on the frontagers by statute, & the discretionary power to vary the normal rule of apportionment according to frontage is given to the local authority, & not to the justices, who are confined to considering the reasonableness of the amount of the burden, not of its incidence.—*ALLEN v. In 1927 the latter sold the land in question to pltf. without having satisfied defts.' demand, & pltf. then proceeded to erect houses on the land in respect of which he became entitled to a subsidy. Defts. thereupon claimed to set off against the subsidy the amount of their claim against the owners for the time being of the land in respect of the apportioned expenses, together with interest thereon:—Held: (1) although defts. might have lost their right to sue the original owner for the expenses they were not prevented from suing pltf. as a subsequent owner for the time being. A demand on such owner was necessary to complete the cause of action for such expenses & Stat. Limitations did not begin to run until such demand had been made; (2) on the footing that Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (c. 57), s. 8, was applicable, that sect. did not apply to defeat a claim against pltf., the owner for the time being, because defts. had no present right to receive the sum set off from pltf. until he became owner & twelve years from that date had not elapsed.—*DENNERLEY v. 2447a. —.]—An urban sanitary authority, acting under the Private Street Works Act, 1892 (c. 57), resolved to execute certain private street works in a street in their district, & to contribute a certain portion of the expenses thereof, & that in settling the apportionment of the balance of the expenses thereof, regard should be had to the greater or less degree of benefit to be derived from the works, by the premises of the frontagers, & they approved provisional apportionments on the frontagers which were duly served & deposited in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Two of the frontagers objected to the provisional apportionments on their premises, before justices, who expressed the opinion that the proposed works were not unnecessary; that the estimated expenses were not excessive; that the premises of the objectors should not be excluded from the apportionment; but they stated that they considered the proposed works were unreasonable in that it was not reasonable that the objectors should bear the whole of the amounts shown in their provisional apportionments. Accordingly they approved the plans, sections, specifications, & estimates of the urban sanitary authority, but quashed in part the apportionments on the objectors' premises, by reducing each of these two apportionments by £100. They confirmed the apportionments on the other frontagers:—Held: the justices had sought to compel the urban sanitary authority to increase their contribution at the risk alternatively of sacrificing the scheme as a whole. It was not within the province of the justices, directly or indirectly, to compel the urban sanitary authority to make a larger contribution than that which they had already agreed to grant.

Upon the further consideration of the case, the justices must adopt one of three courses: increase the apportionments on the other frontagers to satisfy the balance of £200; quash the whole of the apportionment; or adjourn the matter, giving the urban sanitary authority the opportunity of considering whether they would pass a new resolution increasing their contribution by the £200 (per CUR.).—*CHATHAM CORPN. v. 2449a. Time fixed by order—Reasonable time—What must be considered.]—Under sects. 33, 34 of Cardiff Corpn. Act, 1884, the corpn. made an order that a street, not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, should be paved, kerbed, etc., within two months. The estimate & plan deposited in accordance with sect. 33 of the Act showed that under part of the street a sewer was to be laid by the corpn. while the work was being done, & the order showed that some of the frontagers were required to connect the works which they were required to do with the new sewer. Certain frontagers did not comply with the order, & the work was done by the corpn., & after service of notice of apportionment of the expense of the work & demand for payment, the corpn. applied to the ct. by originating summons, for a declaration that the proper proportion of the costs of the work, with interest to date of payment, was a charge upon the premises of those frontagers, in accordance with sect. 54 of the Act:—Held: the time fixed by the order was not, in the circumstances, unreasonable; nor was there any evidence to establish that if the frontagers had done the work themselves the corpn. would have hampered them by laying the sewer simultaneously with their work. The frontagers were entitled to comply with the order & to restrain any interference with them in doing so, but not having so complied, they were liable for the expense of the work being done for them & the corpn. were entitled to the relief claimed.—*CARDIFF CORPN. v. (Consolidation) Act, 1883, ss. 46–50, which were substantially identical with Private Street Works Act, 1892 (c. 57). The corpn. duly complied with the formalities required & made a provisional apportionment on resps., the frontagers on the street, according to their respective frontages. Resps. objected that the works were unnecessary. On the hearing of this objection resps. called no evidence. The stipendiary magistrate held that some works were necessary, but was of opinion that the estimated expenses were too heavy. He reduced the estimate & ordered that one resp. should pay one-half & each other resp. two-thirds of the respective sums named in the provisional apportionment:—Held: inasmuch as the corpn. had not resolved that the apportionment should be on any basis other than frontage, the stipendiary magistrate could not direct an apportionment on any other basis. Subject to that limitation, he must consider & determine, upon evidence, whether the proposed works were in any, & what, respect unnecessary, & must have regard to any alternative proposals, if resps. made any & supported them by evidence, & to the cost thereof.—*BIRMINGHAM CORPN. v. 2471a. — Insufficient particulars.—The Birkenhead Improvement Act, 1884, by sect. 25 provides that: "In a provisional apportionment of expenses of private street works the apportionment of expenses against the premises fronting adjoining or abutting on the street or part in respect of which the expenses are to be incurred shall be apportioned according to the frontage of the respective premises: Provided that the surveyor may settle the apportionment as having regard to all the circumstances of the case & not merely to frontage he may deem most just." By Part I. of the Second Sched. to the Act (which is identical with the Sched. to Private Street Works Act, 1892 (c. 57)), it is provided that provisional apportionments "shall state the amounts charged on the respective premises & the names of the respective owners or reputed owners & shall also state whether the apportionment is made according to the frontage of the respective premises or not & the measurements of the frontages, & the other considerations (if any) on which the apportionment is based."

The Birkenhead Corpn., having resolved to execute certain private street works, approved a "provisional apportionment" of the expenses of the said works between the respective frontagers. The document was expressed to be made "pursuant to the provisions of the Birkenhead Improvement Act, 1884, & principally according to the frontage of the respective premises, & having regard to all the circumstances of the case & the amount & value of the work already executed by or on behalf of certain frontagers." The provisional apportionment was subdivided into different columns showing the names of the respective owners, particulars of the respective properties charged, & the measurements of the front-

ages respectively, & also showing the estimated cost, attributable to each owner, of the work to be executed, under a number of headings. The basis of division was different in different columns, & in some columns the frontagers had been charged on different footings, but the apportionment contained no statement or explanation as to how the various factors, stated in the heading of the apportionment as the considerations on which the apportionment was based, had been applied in the division of the estimated cost of the work between the various owners. On appeal by one of the frontagers from a decision of the justices, overruling a preliminary objection that the provisional apportionment did not comply, for lack of particularity, with the requirements of the local Act:—Held: the Act required particularity, for the information both of the respective frontagers & of the corp., & if no uniform scale was applied, it ought clearly to be shown where the deviation took place; the provisional apportionment failed to give the complete & specific disclosure required by the Sched. & the appeal must be allowed & the case sent back to the justices.—*SMITH v. In 1910 the City had no power to charge the cost of paving streets against the frontagers, but statutes of 1911 & 1914 gave the City that power in the case of permanent paving. In July, 1925, the City passed a resolution that S. Street, which had not been macadamised, should be permanently paved & that the frontagers thereon should be taxed in respect of the cost. Accordingly, S. Street was permanently paved with asphalt. In 1928 resps., as frontagers, were assessed to tax under a statute of that year, which provided that the cost of all pavings laid since Jan. 1, 1910, should be charged to the frontagers at a specified rate. All the statutes above mentioned were enacted as amendments of the City's statutory charter of 1899.—Held: having regard to the specific terms of the statute of 1928 it applied to S. 2580a. — Conversion of two shops into one.—Defts., who had purchased two houses with the shops on the ground floors projecting towards the street on which the premises fronted a few feet beyond the exterior walls of the two upper floors, submitted to the local authority plans of some proposed alterations. These consisted in the main in the conversion of the two shops into one continuous shop with a single entrance from the street in a new position. The local authority took the view that the proposed alterations amounted to taking down the front of the premises for the purpose of rebuilding, so as to entitle them to prescribe a new building line under the Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 155. They therefore refused to approve the plans & called on defts. to set the ground floor front back to the existing exterior walls of the floors above. Defts. having refused to comply, this action was brought on the relation of the local authority & pltf. moved for a declaration that defts. were not entitled to build beyond the prescribed line & for an order on them to remove so much of the new front of the shop as projected beyond that line:—Held: the local authority had no power to prescribe a new building line under sect. 155, because (1) on the true construction of the sect. "the front" included the exterior walls of the two upper floors as well as the exterior wall of the ground floor, & (2) in any case the alterations made to the premises did not amount to taking down the front of the ground floor.—A.-G. v. PRICES' TAILORS (1928), LTD., [1930] 2 Ch. 316; 99 L. J. Ch. 511; 143 L. T. 416; 94 J. P. 226; 29 L. G. R. 15, C. A.

2630a. Covenant to erect & maintain.—A strip of land running the length of the vendor's property was conveyed to purchasers for use in connection with a reservoir, with the result that the vendor's property was severed from the highway by a conduit. The purchasers accordingly covenanted in the conveyance that they would at their own expense erect & maintain across the conduit a bridge of not less than 30 ft. in width to connect the severed portion of the vendor's land with the highway. There was no means of access to the vendor's land except by means of this bridge. The vendor's successor in title, desiring to develop the land as a building estate, claimed to be entitled to use the bridge for the laying of pipes & cables for the supply of water, gas & electricity & other services:—Held: upon the true construction of the conveyance the vendor's successor in title was not entitled to place & maintain upon the bridge anything of a permanent nature which must necessarily be maintained, & he was not entitled to lay pipes or cables on the bridge for any purpose.—*METROPOLITAN WATER BOARD v. 2644a. Agreement to maintain bridge over canal—Extent of duty—Tow-path raised to avoid flooding—Whether council bound to raise bridge.—The construction of a canal involved the interception of a certain public road; & the canal co., in accordance with its statutory obligations, carried the road over the canal by means of a bridge. The canal subsequently became vested in a railway co., who were required under sect. 17 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (c. 48), to keep the canal open & navigable. At a later date the railway co. entered into an agreement with the county council having jurisdiction in the locality under which the council agreed to remove the bridge & to construct a new bridge in substitution thereof; & the council covenanted that they would "from time to time & at all times thereafter well & sufficiently maintain & repair the new bridge & the roadway & footpaths upon the same & the approaches thereto." The agreement provided for a headway of six feet between the arch of the new bridge & the towing-path passing under it. The bridge & the neighbouring part of the canal for considerable distances on both sides of the bridge were in a mining area which had been subsiding for a long time prior to the agreement; & within sixteen years thereafter, owing to further subsidences, there was a general sinking of the bridge & the towing path. As, however, the water level remained the same, the railway co. found it necessary, in order to avoid flooding, to raise the towing path, the resulting effect being that the headway between the bridge & the towing path was reduced to four feet six inches, which was insufficient for the convenient working of the d i. — Upon an application to a county ct. judge for an order declaring a bridge about to be built across a stream to replace a bridge that had been carried away by a storm, to be a county bridge, the sole question was whether the bridge was or would be "of a greater length than 300 feet" within sect. 458 of the Municipal Act. Before the approaches on the west side of the bridge were constructed, the waters sometimes crossed the highway considerably west of a point 300 feet west of the eastern bank, & an embankment that far west was rendered necessary on account of the waters overflowing the highway & being then constructed, became part of the highway:—Held: the embankment was rendered necessary within the meaning of the Act & the bridge was therefore of greater length than 300 feet.—Re PICKERING & ONTARIO, [1930] 1 D. L. R. 820; 64 O. L. R. 611.—CAN.

The cause of the accident was the failure of defts. to maintain the footway in good condition. In an action for damages:—Held: the swing bridge was not a highway & defts. were not in the position of a surveyor of highways, & therefore defts. could not avoid liability on the ground of nonfeasance or on the ground that a surveyor of highways is not liable to pay damages to persons injured by his neglect of duty, & pltf. was entitled to recover.—*GUILFOYLE v. 2719a. — Damage by locomotive passing over bridge—Locomotive Act, 1861 (c. 70), s. 7.—In respect of actual damage to a bridge, as distinguished from consequential loss, the liability to repair is imposed upon the owner of the locomotive if he has the charge of it at the material time, but if some person other than the owner has the charge of it, the liability is upon that person. The above sect. does not make the owner & such other person jointly & severally liable for that damage.—*SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. 2719b. Liability of railway company for non-feasance.—Pltf., a steam-crane driver, in proceeding to his work on his bicycle, had to cross a bridge belonging to deft. co. The road over it, & the approach thereto, were alleged to be in a bad state of repair, there being several potholes & a rut, about 2 ft. from the near side, several inches deep in some places, extending a number of yards from the crown of the bridge down the incline, & said to have been caused in the course of time by rainwater. Pltf.'s machine got into the rut & he was thrown to the ground & suffered severe injuries to his head. It was found as a fact that the accident was caused by the want of repair of the road over the bridge. The claim was based on negligence, nuisance, & breach of the statutory duty of defts. to maintain the road on the bridge & the approach thereto. The bridge had been constructed by defts.' predecessors under the South Western Exeter Extension Act, 1856, incorporating the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20). It was contended on behalf of defts. (i) that defts. were in a position similar to that of a highway authority, & were not liable for non-feasance; (ii) that they were entitled to the benefit of Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893; (iii) that they were only liable, if at all, to maintain the road over the bridge for the purposes of the traffic using the road in the year in which it was constructed:—Held: (1) by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 46, the co. were liable for non-feasance as well as misfeasance; (2) a railway co. is not a public authority within the meaning of that term as used in Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (c. 61), s. 1; (3) the road was in fact in a condition which would have been dangerous to traffic as it was at the date at which the bridge was constructed; but the duty of a railway co. under Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), s. 46, is to maintain the bridge & its approaches in the state they are when constructed in accordance with that sect., & that necessarily implies an absence of dangerous ruts.—*SWAIN v. 30 ii. ———.—MUNN v. HAAHTI (1926), 37 B. C. R. 71.—CAN.

m i. ———. Agreement to marry after obtaining divorce.—L. alleged that in Apr. 1928, she & D. verbally agreed to marry one another as soon as she could obtain a divorce & that D. also agreed to pay the costs of obtaining it. She was then a married woman who had been deserted by her husband for upwards of twenty years. She obtained her decree absolute, but D. then refused to marry her or to pay the costs of the divorce. She brought an action against him for damages for alleged breach of promise, & for special damages to the amount of the costs of the divorce proceedings. The following questions of law were argued before trial: (a) whether the alleged promise to marry as soon as pltf. could obtain a divorce was actionable in view of the fact that pltf. was a married woman at the time of the alleged promise; & (b) whether the alleged promise to pay the costs of obtaining the divorce was a valid promise in view of the above facts. It was contended for pltf. that, as in New Zealand the law recognises as a ground for divorce a mere agreement for separation subsisting for three years, the fact that pltf. had been deserted by her husband for upwards of twenty years at the time of the alleged promise was sufficient to relax the rigidity of the rule of public policy.—Held: (1) It would be contrary to public policy to allow an action to be maintained on a promise such as was alleged by pltf., as, in principle, there is no distinction between a promise to marry after the wife's death & one to marry after a divorce is obtained, & it is immaterial that no harm resulted or that the possibility of harm is remote; (2) although in New Zealand the law recognises an agreement for separation subsisting for three years as a ground for divorce, the argument that there should on that ground be a relaxation of the rule of public policy disregards the principle that it is the tendency, not the actual result, of the recognition of contracts such as sued on in this case that affords the ground for the rigidity of the rule; & on that test pltf. must fail; (3) the agreement as to the costs of the divorce is covered by the principle applicable to the promise to marry.—LAMBERT v. DILLON, [1933] N. Z. L. R. 1059.—N.Z.

r i. ———.—In an action for breach of promise of marriage, corroboration may be found in circumstances which according to ordinary experience would be accepted as showing that the relationship of engaged persons existed between the parties, but evidence of the most affectionate relations between a man & his mistress is no evidence at all from which the ct. might draw the conclusion that the relationship of engaged persons existed.—*SAWDON v. 89 ii. ———. Necessity to plead & prove.—The fact that in an action for breach of promise of marriage the trial judge found that both parties had repented of their bargain held not to support the plea that the agreement had been rescinded by mutual consent before any breach thereof, there being no suggestion in such finding that they had translated their feelings into the performance of any act or acts which would terminate the contract whether by mutual consent or otherwise. Where in such an action deft. wishes to contend that pltf. was not ready & willing to marry him, he should in his defence plead that specifically as a condition precedent & allege its non-performance; otherwise its due performance is presumed.—*LAFAYETTE v. 453a. ———.]—The detail & strictness of proof of a marriage required in a criminal prosecution for bigamy is of a totally different standard from that required before a magistrate who is dealing with the question of the maintenance of a wife alleged to have been deserted. In civil cases, where there is evidence of the fact of a ceremony of marriage, followed by cohabitation of the parties, everything necessary for the validity of the marriage will be presumed in the absence of decisive evidence to the contrary, even though it may be necessary to presume the grant of a special licence. The burden of impeaching the factum of a marriage & the presumption of law semper presumitur pro matrimonio, lies upon the impeaching party.

In 1873, T. B.'s father, who lived in England, executed a deed covenanting to make certain payments to the children or their mother & this deed contained these words: "the following reputed children of his deceased son," T. B., "which children are now in England with their mother E. M., otherwise E. B.".—Held: (1) the absence of any entry in the register of marriages was not sufficient to rebut the presumption of marriage of T. B.; (2) the words in the deed of 1873 were insufficient to rebut the presumption; (3) the presumption of marriage can be rebutted only by evidence of the most cogent kind, & the children in question ought to be declared to be the lawful children of T. 595a. — Bankruptcy of husband.]—The bkpcy. of a husband who has entered into a separation deed is an answer to any claim for the payment of agreed sums under the deed, but does not convert his wife's agreement to live apart with an allowance into an agreement to live apart without maintenance. Her right to that maintenance is not in contract but is an incident of matrimonial status at common law. An agreement under a separation deed to receive an allowance merely suspends, but does not annul, that right, which revives as soon as the agreement is terminated by bkpcy., notwithstanding the receipt of a dividend. The dividend is not a transaction between husband & wife, but an incident in the bkpcy., & its receipt does not operate as a new bargain with the husband compounding the common law right of the wife. The separation agreement thus put an end to does not debar the wife from alleging the wilful neglect of the husband to provide reasonable maintenance for her within Summary Jurisdiction (Separation & Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1925.—*DEWE v. o i. ——A person who, without justification, procures, entices or persuades a wife to leave her husband is liable in damages to the husband for the latter's loss of his right of consortium. Adultery is no part of the cause of action in such a case. In an action by a husband for the enticement away of his wife he must prove that it was deft.'s enticement which caused her to cease from cohabiting & consorting with pltf. Where the only evidence is that it was she, rather than deft., who was the enticer, the action fails.—BRUNE v. STENSTO, [1938] 1 W. W. R. 746.—CAN.

k i. ——The enticement away of a wife by a third person is an infringement of the absolute right of the husband to the benefit of the society & services of the wife, & the husband can maintain a suit for damages for such actionable wrong. It is immaterial that at that time the husband may have been away at another town; it is not the mere depriving of a husband for a day or two of the society of his wife which gives rise to the action, but the fact that deft. has acted in a way towards the wife of pltf. which is an infringement of pltf.'s right under the contract of marriage. If she survived P. & married again she was to have the income of one-fifth for her life of the two-thirds during the subsequent coverture. Power to appoint the two-thirds was given to her by deed or will for the benefit of her children by the settlor, such power to cease on remarriage except as to the one-fifth, to the income of which she would still be entitled & without prejudice to any appointment she might previously have made otherwise than by precluding her from exercising on remarriage any power of revocation reserved to her so far as regarded that part of the two-thirds in which her interest then ceased. If she survived & remarried, the power to appoint new trustees conferred on her by the deed was to cease. There were four children of the marriage, all born before the execution of the deed. In 1919 the marriage was dissolved, & by a deed poll in 1922 the wife appointed the two-thirds to the four children of the marriage, reserving a power of revocation & new appointment. Shortly after she remarried. On a summons taken out by the trustees asking whether as from the remarriage they should pay her the income of the two-thirds or of one-fifth thereof, whether she was entitled to exercise the power of revocation & new appointment reserved by the deed poll, & whether she still retained the power to appoint new trustees:—Held: except in so far as the wife's power of appointment in future was concerned, her position under the deed was wholly unaffected by the remarriage she had contracted. —Re PILKINGTON'S SETTLEMENT, *PILKINGTON v. “until she shall marry again”—Not applicable to remarriage during first husband's lifetime.—By a marriage settlement property therein called “the husband's fund” was assigned to the trustees on trusts which provided that from & after the husband's death the trustees should pay the income of the husband's fund to the wife, if she should survive the husband, “during her life or until she shall marry again. . . .” The settlement provided also that from & after the husband's death & the wife's death or re-marriage the trustees should stand possessed of the husband's fund & the income of it in trust for the issue of the marriage as the husband & wife should by deed jointly appoint, or in default of & subject to any such appointment as the survivor of them should by deed or will appoint, & in default of & subject to any such appointment by the survivor in trust for the child or children of the marriage as therein mentioned. The marriage was dissolved in 1916 upon the wife's petition. The wife married again in 1930. In 1932 the husband died:—Held: the words “until she shall marry again” must be construed to mean a marriage entered into by the wife after the husband's death, & the wife was therefore entitled to the income of the husband's fund (until she should marry again) & could still exercise the power of appointment over the husband's fund given to her as survivor of the husband & herself.—Re MONRO'S SETTLEMENT, *MONRO v. dividend in bankruptcy.]—A marriage having been dissolved by a decree absolute in 1925, the wife remarried shortly afterwards. Immediately before the remarriage the former husband executed a settlement on his former wife in consideration of her release of any claim to alimony or maintenance from him. By the settlement the husband covenanted with his former wife & as a separate covenant with the trustees to pay her, during their joint lives, an annuity of such an amount as after deduction of income tax would yield the clear sum of £3,000 a year for her separate use without power of anticipation whilst under coverture. In 1929 the former husband was adjudicated bkpt. Pltfs., as trustees of the settlement, & deft., the former wife, jointly proved in the bkpcy. for a large sum made up of several items, of which £41,723 represented the capital value of the annuity of £3,000. The proof was admitted, & in Dec. 1931, a dividend of 6d. in the pound was paid to pltfs. This amounted to £2,322, of which £1,043 1s. 6d. was the proportion attributable to the annuity. On a summons taken out by pltfs. to determine the question whether they ought to pay to deft. the dividend so far as it was attributable to the annuity, notwithstanding the restraint upon anticipation, or whether they ought to invest the same, as being capital, in purchasing an annuity for the life of deft.:—Held: the trustees could properly pay the whole dividend to deft.—

982a. Order for payment of costs—Discovery after order—Apportionment of receiver—Law Reform (Married Women & Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30).—An order was made on Nov. 4, 1936, for the payment by pltf. (a married woman) of the costs of a motion in an action. The order directed that "such costs are not to be payable out of any property of hers to the enjoyment of which there is attached any enforceable restraint against anticipation." Under pltf.'s marriage settlement (dated Oct. 3, 1892) it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the trust fund upon trust to pay the annual income thereof to the wife during her life for her separate use without power of anticipation. Shortly after the making of the order & before payment of the above-mentioned costs pltf.'s husband died:—Held: the fact that pltf. was under coverture at the date of the order did not, in the events which had happened, prevent the trust fund from being applied in satisfaction of the costs of the motion; & in view of the provisions of the Law Reform (Married Women & Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), & the repeal thereby of sects. 1-5 of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), & sect. 1 of Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 63), & pltf. having ceased to be under coverture, the trust fund was not subject to an enforceable restraint against anticipation & could be so applied.—Re MEREDITH'S TRUSTS, MEREDITH v. A widow commenced an action against a professional man, from whom she claimed damages for alleged negligence. Before the trial of the action she remarried. At the trial judgment was given for deft. with costs:—Held: (1) the liability to pay costs was one wholly arising at a date when pltf. was a married woman, & was therefore payable out of her separate estate & not otherwise; (2) there was jurisdiction under Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (c. 63), s. 2, to order & enforce the payment of costs out of that separate estate whether subject to a restraint on anticipation or not; (3) such an order ought to be made having regard to the circumstances in which the action had been commenced & prosecuted.—TOWNSHEND v. 1223a. Necessity for survivorship of wife.

In the year 1876 a husband during the lifetime of his wife took out a policy on his life with an assurance co., whereby, after a recital that the assured "for the benefit of his wife" in pursuance of Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), had proposed to the co. to effect an assurance on his own life for £500, in consideration of the payment of the premiums during the life of the assured, the co. covenanted that the property of the co. should be liable to pay to the exors., administrators & assigns of the assured the sum of £500. In 1918 the wife died, & in 1929 the husband died without having married again. In 1891 the husband was adjudicated bkpt. & obtained his discharge as from Apr. 14, 1899 :—Held : upon the true construction of the policy & Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), s. 10, the interest in the policy moneys vested in the husband & upon his adjudication in the trustee in his bankruptcy subject to the trust in favour of his wife which ensured for her benefit only if she survived her husband ; with the result that as she died before her husband & before the fund fell into possession, the policy moneys belonged & were payable to the trustee in bkpty.

Semble : Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c. 93), s. 10, does not enable a husband to confer the benefit of the policy upon any wife who does not by surviving him become his widow.—Re COLLIER, [1930] 2 Ch. 37 ; 143 L. 1226a. If living at his death—Cash value of policy sought to be taken by insured during life.—A husband took out an insurance policy for £500 on his life, & by the terms of the policy the co. agreed to pay that sum to insured's wife, if she were living at his death, or in the event of her prior death to pay it to insured's exors., administrators & assigns. The policy contained a proviso that, if at the end of twenty years insured was still living, he should have the right to exercise any of six specified options. Insured being then still living, he exercised an option to receive the entire cash value of the policy with its share of accumulated profits & to discontinue the policy. A sum of £288 thus became payable. The co. were unwilling to pay over this sum except on the joint receipt of the husband & wife, & ultimately paid it into ct. :—Held : (1) the policy came within sect. 11 of the above Act, & created a trust in favour of the wife in certain events ; (2) insured must be taken to have exercised the option for the benefit of the trust ; (3) unless the husband & wife came to an agreement, the fund must be accumulated in ct. until it could be ascertained by the death of either party who was entitled to it.—Re FLEETWOOD'S POLICY, [1926] Ch. 48 ; 95 L. Two years later, & before the policy possessed any surrender value, the wife died. The husband kept the policy on foot, paying the premiums, until it matured, when the insurance co. paid the policy moneys into a deposit account in the joint names of the husband & another as personal representatives of the deceased wife. The husband having died, his widow, as his administratrix, claimed a lien on the policy moneys for the amount of the premiums paid after his first wife's death :—Held : while the policy moneys belonged to the first wife's estate, in accordance with the decision in Cousins v. Sun Life Assurance Society, [1933] Ch. 126, the estate of the husband was entitled to a lien thereon for the amount of the premiums paid by him since his first wife's death, as being money expended by him as a trustee to preserve property of a cestui que trust.—*Re SMITH'S ESTATE, BILHAM v. The daughter was an adopted child, & there had been no legal adoption under Adoption of Children Act, 1926 (c. 29):—Held: (1) there was no effective trust for the adopted child by virtue of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 11, & the infant was outside the scope of that sect.; (2) the adopted child had no legal right to claim the policy moneys from the insurance co. It contained a memorandum stating that it was understood & agreed that all claims thereunder should be payable to his wife, "if she is living at the happening of the event upon which the claim becomes payable, or if she is dead, then to the exors., administrators & assigns of the assured." The assured died as the result of an accident within the policy, his wife surviving him:—Held: (1) the policy was one effected by the assured on his own life within Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75); (2) it was expressed to be for the benefit of his wife within the same sect.; (3) accordingly, his wife was solely & beneficially entitled to the moneys payable thereunder.—*Re GLADITZ, GUARANTY EXECUTOR & TRUSTEE CO., LTD. v. The conveyance was dated Apr. 9, 1920, & was not registered until the following Dec. Until registration the deed had not been delivered, & deft. had been told nothing about it:—Held: though the presumption of advancement may be rebutted by evidence of actual intention, there was cogent evidence of pltf. having ultimately made up his mind that his wife should have the property.—HARRINGTON v. o 1. ——— Subsequent deed of gift by wife.]—Pltf., who was the former wife of deft. & the registered owner of a property known as the G. Hotel, sued to have a caveat registered by him discharged, on the ground that he had no interest in the property. The

caveat was based upon the following document: "I hereby agree to give D. half of the property known as the G. Hotel, & to give him half the rent of the same from the present date, & he agrees to pay half of all debts against the above property up to date for the said half interest." The land had been purchased in 1902 by deft. in the name of pltf., his then wife. Upon that purchase & the erection & equipment of the hotel building he applied the proceeds of the sale of two quarter sections, one of which was in his name & the other in hers. They ran the hotel business together, until 1905, he acting as manager, she as cook & housekeeper. Having agreed to separate, they sold the furniture, & leased the hotel, & borrowed money on mtge. to help pay off the floating liabilities. The husband signed the mtge. as a joint covenantor, & the lease as a consenting party. Before leaving her he asked her to sign the memorandum above set out which she did without demur:—Held: an express trust existed in favour of deft. for one half of the estate in question.—REYNOLDS v. BETSON, [1931] 1 W. W. R. 793; 2 D. L. R. 760; 39 Man. L. R. 411.—CAN.

1306 i. ——— As between husband & wife—Notwithstanding intention to defraud creditors.]—In Mar. 1931, applt., who was registered as the owner of an "E." motor car, signed an application under Motor Vehicles Act requesting cancellation of his registration as he had disposed of the car to resp. his wife; the wife signed a form stating she had acquired the car from applt. In Aug. 1931, the "E." car, by arrangements to which applt. was a party, was traded in for a "N." car, applt. paying a deposit & also the balance of the price, after allowing for the value of the "E." The prescribed documents showing that the "N." car had been disposed of to & acquired by the wife, were signed by the vendor & the wife. The car was kept in a garage at the matrimonial home, to which both husband & wife had keys, but the wife, although able to drive, did not drive the "N." car. There was evidence to show that applt. put the car into the wife's name to avoid financial liabilities in case of accident, & as a safeguard against creditors. It is an offence under Motor Vehicles Act to make a false statement in an application & by that Act a certificate relating to the ownership of a car is prima facie evidence of the truth of its contents. In proceedings by applt. to establish his ownership & right to possession:—Held: the evidence disclosed a purchase by applt. in the name of resp.; the presumption was that of a gift by applt. to resp.; & therefore, the covinous arrangement alleged by applt. could not be permitted to rebut the presumption of ownership, which arose from the acts of the parties as well as under the Statute.—*MUSMAN v. sm. Purchase in husband's name—Subsequent transfer to wife—Failure of consideration.]—Husband & wife purchased a house in Oct. 1920. The house was in pltf.'s name until Jan. 1922, when it was transferred to the wife. 1311a. —.]—A husband opened a banking account in his wife's name, all payments into the account being made by the husband. The account was used for domestic & other purposes. The wife always asked her husband's consent before she drew on the account & she had given the bank a mandate to allow her husband to draw on the account. Judgment creditors of the wife sought to garnishee the account:—Held: on the facts there was a resulting trust in favour of the husband & as the moneys were therefore the property of the husband, the wife's creditors could not garnishee the account, although it was in her name.—*HARRODS, LTD. v. The wife received the mtge. money from the mtgees. Later the mtgees. during the lifetime of the wife called upon the husband as such surety to repay the mtge. moneys, which he did. After the death of the wife the husband sought to prove in her estate as a creditor for the sum so paid, when it was contended that he had no right to prove as a creditor since the payment was an advancement of the wife:—Held: the husband in paying the mtgee. was discharging a legal obligation under his guarantee, & in such circumstances there could be no question of making a gift & no presumption of an advancement. Upon payment he became entitled to all remedies of a surety who has paid the debt of the principal debtor, & in the absence of any evidence of a release by him, he was entitled to prove in the estate as a creditor.—*Re SALISBURY-JONES, HAMMOND v. for him. On the trial the husband stated that when he made the conveyance to his wife he did so on her undertaking that the members of her family would vacate the house, & this was never carried out:—Held: plff. could not succeed, as the only claim he could set up would be that he had made a conveyance for a consideration that had failed, & his action would be either for specific performance or damages.—*Boby v. S. M. 1892, c. 95, was in force, the husband being then solvent, & a certificate of title therefor issued in her name under Manitoba Real Property Act:—Held: the beneficial, as well as the legal, interest in the land vested in her for her separate use, & neither the land nor its proceeds could be taken in execution for debts of the husband subsequently incurred, notwithstanding Married Woman's Act, s. 2, respecting property received by a married woman from her husband during coverture.—*FRASER v. Money was paid by the bank to the Public Trustee. Having been restored to sanity the widow redeposited in the bank what was left of the money to the joint credit of herself & two relatives:—Held: the money originally deposited belonged to D. & was placed to the credit of himself & wife as a means of conveniently managing the affairs of himself & his family; & therefore, the presumption in favour of the right of his wife to what remained of the fund on his death was rebutted.—*STADDER v. was no restraint on anticipation. During the life of her first husband the wife made promissory notes in favour of pltf., & pltf., the first husband being still alive, brought an action claiming a charge on the policies:—Held: the trust for separate use did not arise till after the death of the husband, & as the contracts of a married woman can only be enforced against property which formed part of her separate estate at the date of the contract, the action could not be maintained.—*KING v. 1800a. ——— Proceedings Instituted against wife.—A husband took divorce proceedings against his wife on the ground of her adultery. She consulted a solr., who upon her instructions put in a defence denying the charge & briefed counsel to appear for her. At the hearing the wife failed to appear, & a decree was made against her dissolving the marriage on the grounds alleged in the petition. The wife's counsel applied for costs, but as no security for her costs had been obtained, no costs were granted. The wife's solr. brought an action in the K. B. Div. to recover the costs from the husband, on the ground of his wife's agency of necessity at common law. The judge found as a fact that the solr. had acted without negligence, honestly believing that the wife was innocent & that she would be successful in her defence:

—Held: in those circumstances the wife had no authority to bind her husband, so as to make him liable for the costs of her defence to his petition for divorce.—ARNOLD & WEAVER v. AMARI, [1928] 1 K. B. 584; 97 L. J. K. B. 238; 138 L. T. 591; 44 T. L. R. 221; 72 Sol. Jo. 138.

Under an alternative claim, not based on fraud, pltf. alleged that she had married deft. in reliance on his assurance that she was at liberty to marry. She claimed also rent for the time deft. lived in her house, wages as housekeeper on a quantum meruit basis, a sum alleged to have been paid by her for household expenses, & an amount due on a promissory note:—Held: the claims based on fraud & on said assurance had not been substantiated; there had been no express or implied agreement by deft. to pay rent or wages; there was proof of deft.'s promise to repay the amounts advanced by her for household expenses prior to 1919, but Stat. Limitations barred recovery thereof, & there had been no express or implied authority from deft. to incur said expenses thereafter; & the claim on the note had been released for good consideration.—MARSHALL v. 1852b. Law Reform (Married Women & Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 3—Whether retrospective.—By a writ dated Aug. 16, 1935 (after the coming into operation on Aug. 2, 1935, of Law Reform (Married Women & Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30)), pltf., a married woman, sued defts., husband & wife, claiming damages in respect of slanders alleged to have been uttered by the female deft. on divers dates in 1934 & in the early months of 1935, the claim as against the male deft. being that he authorised or caused the female deft. to utter the words complained of. Defts. denied the publication, & the male deft. denied that he authorised or caused the female deft. to utter the alleged defamatory words. At the trial the judge left the case against both defts. to the jury without directing them that if they found for pltf. they should return a separate verdict with separate damages in respect of each publication. No objection was taken to this direction at the time. The jury found a single verdict against both defts. & judgment was entered against them accordingly. On appeal:—Held: (1) there was evidence entitling the jury to find that the female deft. uttered the slanders complained of & therefore that the verdict & judgment against her must stand; (2) there was no evidence that the male deft. authorised or caused the female deft. to utter the words complained of; (3) Law Reform (Married Women & Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), has a retrospective operation, & by virtue of its provisions the male deft. was not liable for his wife's tort; (4) as no objection was taken at the trial to the jury being asked to consider the different publications as a whole instead of separately, or not being asked to assess separate damages in respect of each publication, the female deft. could not be heard to say that the verdict was a nullity.

Per SCOTT, L.J. There is nothing in the Judicature Acts or in the Rules of the Supreme Ct. that separate verdicts & judgments are invariably necessary in respect of separate causes of action contained in the same writ. The question whether one or more causes of action can be included in one verdict or judgment depends upon the exercise of the trial judge's judicial discretion upon all the circumstances of the case.

Per SCOTT, L.J. The canon against giving a retrospective interpretation to a statute, in the absence of specific provision, expresses no rigid or absolute rule. It does not apply to a statute dealing with procedure, nor, semble, does it apply to a statute abolishing old legal fictions.—BARBER v. PIDGEN, [1937] 1 K. B. 664; [1937] 1 All E. R. 115; 106 L. This point of law was set down for argument under R. S. C., Ord. XXV., r. 2:—Held: by LEWIS, J., there was no general principle of public policy that no contract is enforceable which is inconsistent with maintenance of the obligations of the marriage tie, & in the absence of proof of facts showing that this contract was against public policy, it was enforceable; by the Ct. of Appeal, the contract, as pleaded in the statement of claim, was not an agreement for separation of husband & wife, & the consideration for the promise was not intended to be the consent of the wife to forego the consortium of her husband, & therefore the contract alleged in the pleading was not illegal & void.—*DAVIES v. - 1944a. —.]—By a deed dated Oct. 23, 1936, a husband covenanted, in consideration of his wife discontinuing divorce proceedings then pending & brought against him on the ground of his alleged adultery with a named woman, & of his wife's returning to live with him, that, if at any time thereafter she should bring further divorce proceedings founded on acts of adultery committed with the same woman after the date of the deed, he would, upon his wife requiring him so to do, assign to two trustees all his interest in certain business premises, together with the goodwill of the business, upon trust, with the consent of the husband & the wife, to sell, & until sale to allow the husband to occupy the premises & conduct the business. The husband further agreed that, should the wife obtain a final decree against him, he would, if required by her, assign the premises to her or her nominees absolutely, & enter into a covenant not to enter into a similar business for a period of five years within a distance of 10 miles from the boundary of the county borough wherein the business was situated. It was also stipulated that, if a final decree was not obtained within two years from the commencement of the proceedings, or the wife did not call for an assignment within three months from the making of a final decree, the premises were to be reassigned to him. The petition was dismissed by consent on Oct. 30, 1936, & the wife returned to live with her husband. On Aug. 24, 1937, she presented a further petition for divorce alleging adultery with the same woman. On Sept. 17, 1937, she called upon him to assign the property to trustees in accordance with the terms of the above deed, & upon his refusing to do so, commenced these proceedings for specific performance:—Held: (1) the question of the legality of the restriction upon the husband carrying on business did not arise in these proceedings, & would only arise when the wife called for a transfer from the trustees; (2) the words "founded on" an act of adultery did not require actual proof of that adultery, but meant that proceedings were commenced on the basis of such adultery having been committed; (3) the deed did not impose a penalty upon the husband, but made provision for the wife upon the happening of the event stated; (4) the deed was not an agreement for the future separation of husband & wife living together, but one providing for reconciliation of a husband & wife living apart, & the addition of a pro-

- 2014a. Covenant to pay one quarter of gross income—Right to deduct outgoings.—A husband & wife entered into a deed for separation. After proceedings had begun with reference to the amount payable to the wife under the deed, the proceedings were settled on terms contained in an order of the ct. which included the provision that the husband should pay to the wife such sum as, after payment of income tax, would amount to one-quarter of the husband's gross income. The husband's income was derived from earnings as a film producer. During the period to which this summons referred, the husband had to pay a commission of £135. He contended that in order to ascertain his gross income he was entitled to deduct such sum from his film production fees, which amounted to £3,350, & therefore, his gross income was nearly £3,215:—Held: although the particular provision was awkwardly phrased, yet it obviously meant that the wife was able to put in her pocket, free from any claims to income tax, a sum which would amount to one-quarter of her husband's income in the usual way, that is to say, it meant such sum as was his income after all proper deductions had been made in respect of his business, but before any deduction was made in respect of income tax. It followed that the husband was entitled to discharge his obligations by paying over to the wife a sum which she would put into her pocket free of all claim for income tax & which would amount to one-quarter of £3,215, & there would be a declaration that the husband was entitled to deduct expenses necessarily incurred in his occupation.—Re HISCOTT'S INDENTURE (1937), 158 L. In 1936 the husband died. The widow claimed that his estate was liable to continue paying the maintenance during the rest of her life, but the exors. contended that the liability had come to an end by the husband's death:—Held: as the deed provided that the weekly payment to the wife should continue during her life & as there was nothing in the language used to show an intention that the husband's obligation should continue only during his life, his estate remained liable to pay the weekly sum to the widow.—*KIRK v. - 2039a. — — — — —.]—By a deed of separation reciting that differences had arisen between a husband & a wife, it was agreed that the wife should during the life of the husband live separate & apart from him & free from his marital control & authority as if she were unmarried, & that the wife should retain as her separate property certain articles which, if she should die in the lifetime of the husband without having disposed of them, should devolve as if she had died possessed thereof intestate & a widow. The husband covenanted that he would during the life of the wife pay to her an annual sum of £600. The wife was also to be entitled to certain furniture & effects for the use of herself during her life. Throughout the deed the parties were referred to as "the husband" & "the wife"

Her husband claimed that the furniture & other goods were his property, & issued a writ in detinue against the warehousemen claiming the delivery up of the goods. The wife also claimed the goods as being her property. The warehousemen disclaimed any interest in the goods except for storage charges, & took out an interpleader summons in the action, making the wife the claimant. An order was made by a master directing the trial of an issue in the King's Bench Division to determine whether the goods were the property of the husband or the wife, & directing that in that issue the husband was to be pltf. & the wife was to be deft. The judge in chambers affirmed the order. Upon an appeal by the wife on the ground that such an order could not be made as between a husband & a wife:—Held: the interpleader issue which was directed was not an action by the husband against the wife but a proceeding in the action by the husband against the warehousemen, & the order for interpleader was necessary in order to give relief to the warehousemen, who had two claimants making claims against them in respect of the property, & there was jurisdiction under R. S. C., Ord. LVII, r. 7, to make the order directing an interpleader issue to be tried, & the husband was properly directed to be in the position of pltf. in the issue, & the wife in the position of deft., because the deposit of the property with the warehousemen had been made by the wife, & the husband had to make out his case.—*DE LA RUE v. Pltf. alleged that deft., his wife, had wrongfully broken open a trunk & taken therefrom a sum of currency belonging to him, & that she had deposited a certain amount thereof to her credit under an assumed name in the post office savings bank at Winnipeg, where the money remained, & that she had refused on demand to transfer or return it to him. He prayed that the money be declared his property, for an injunction restraining her from withdrawing it, & for an order that the money be paid to him or that she sign a cheque therefor to his order:—Held: pltf. was not suing for a tort but to have it declared that the money was his & for enforcement of his title thereto. The appeal was allowed, & the injunction was made permanent, & pltf. was declared to be entitled to the money.—SEREDOWICZ v. SEREDOWICZ, [1934] 1 W. W. R. 665; 3 D. L. R. 47; 42 Man. L. 2292 ii. ———.]—A wife, who was being driven by her husband in his motor car, was injured in a collision between the motor car & a motor lorry. She brought an action of damages against the owner of the lorry & against her husband:—Held: the action against the husband was incompetent, in respect that (a) at common law the relationship existing between husband & wife is of so intimate a character that it is against public policy that the one should have a right of action against the other in consequence of a wrong done, & (b) Married Women's Property (Scott-

the W. R. Crawshaw Ralston mentioned in the inscription & he had caused the inscription to be made. Pltf. brought an action against her husband for libel & also for a declaration that she was the lawful wife of deft.:—Held: though the inscription was capable of a defamatory meaning, pltf., by reason of Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 12, could not sue her husband on it, the action being for a tort & not for the protection & security of her separate property.

(2) If there were any doubt as to the validity of the marriage, in my opinion, an action at law in the K. B. Div. of the High Ct. is not the proper proceeding in which to have that matter determined. 2294a. — For negligence—Injury sustained before marriage.]—Although by Married

Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 12, a married woman has the same civil remedies for the protection & security of her own separate property as if it belonged to her as a feme sole, & by sect. 24 "property" includes a thing in action, nevertheless a right of action for a pure tort which accrued before the marriage of the parties is not a thing in action within sect. 24, & consequently such right is not part of the wife's separate property.

An unmarried woman sustained injuries through a man's negligent driving, & issued a writ against him claiming damages in respect thereof. Before the trial of the action she married him:—Held: her right of action was not such a thing in action as would become her separate property within the meaning of the Act, but was barred by the general disability of husband & wife to sue each other for a tort.—GOTTLIFFE v. there has been & is conduct on the part of resp. which has destroyed the verum matrimonium, as, by a genuine & deliberate repudiation of the marriage contract & its obligations, the ct. may ex justa causa grant the relief.—McM. v. McM., McK. v. McK., [1936] 1 R. 177.—IR.

2453a. —.]—In this suit two questions arose: (a) whether a memorandum of agreement permitting the wife to live separate & apart was a deed of separation; (b) whether her proposal, after having herself separated from her husband & signed the agreement, that they should set up house together in the interests of the children, constituted a sincere desire for resumption of cohabitation. For petitioner it was submitted that the memorandum of agreement relied upon was not a deed of separation, but merely an agreement for maintenance for a limited period. Even if it were a deed of separation, the wife was entitled to change her mind, & she had in fact shown a sincere desire to live together again with her husband, though her motive might have been the welfare of the children:—Held: the memorandum of agreement was a valid & binding & subsisting agreement to live separate & apart. The wife's proposal, not being made to restore the conjugal relationship simpliciter, but merely so that she & her husband & the children should set up house together, was not a sincere desire that they should live together. within the period of ten years immediately preceding the filing of the petition." Petitioner has to establish not merely that resp. is a person of unsound mind & is unlikely to recover, but also that resp. has been confined as such in an institution for the required period—i.e., confined as a person afflicted with unsoundness of mind to a degree that warrants the making of a committal order. Consequently, it is not permissible under the above-quoted para. (f) to count any period of detention as a voluntary boarder in a mental institution which resulted in relief & temporary cure & discharge merely because the person ultimately became a person of so unsound a mind as to warrant & result in committal, or to treat a voluntary boarder as having been actually confined as a person of unsound mind merely because it is established by evidence that such resp. could have been lawfully confined as a person of unsound mind.—G. v. 2518a. —.]—A husband & wife intermarried in Feb. 1922, & continued to cohabit until July, 1927, when the wife left the husband. On Nov. 2, 1927, the wife petitioned for a divorce founded upon an act of sodomy alleged to have been committed on her by the husband in Mar. 1922, & alleged acts of cruelty consisting of (a) acts of shameless uncleanness & invitations to repeat them, & (b) ordinary acts of cruelty, such as acts of ill-temper & abuse.

At the trial the judge in summing up to the jury did not warn the jury against finding that the sodomy alleged had been committed on the uncorroborated evidence of the wife, who was an accomplice; nor did he clearly point out that before it could be held that there was cruelty as regards the sexual malpractices it must be shown that they caused danger to life, limb or health, bodily or mental, or a reasonable expectation of it. The jury's verdict was that sodomy had been committed as alleged; that the husband had been guilty of cruelty of the class (a), & that he had not been guilty of cruelty of class (b). The judge then made a decree nisi for dissolution of the marriage. On appeal:—Held: (1) the judge ought to have warned the jury that cogent evidence was required to overcome the presumption of innocence of sodomy, & that they should not convict on the wife's uncorroborated evidence; (2) the ct. must take notice of the fact that there had been condonation of the offence, even though the husband did not plead it; (3) the judge had misdirected the jury by saying that the sexual malpractices were cruelty in themselves, as there could not be legal cruelty without danger to life, limb, or health, physical or mental, or reasonable apprehension of it; & (4) instead of directing a new trial the ct. should dismiss the wife's petition.

(5) The wife having on the evidence been a consenting party to the act of sodomy alleged to have been committed it would be impossible for her to obtain a decree of divorce based solely on that act.

(6) The rules with regard to condonation & connivance as a bar to a decree for divorce were well established in the practice of the Ecclesiastical Cts. before the Act of 1857. In my judgment these rules apply to cases in which the ground alleged for divorce is sodomy (GREER, L.J.).—STATHAM v. STATHAM, [1929] P. 131; 98 L. J. P. 113; 140 L. T. 292; 45 T. L. 2743 v. —.]—The rule that evidence by a husband or wife of non-access is inadmissible, is the same in British India as in England, & is applicable not only to cases in which the legitimacy of the child is in issue but also to proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery, where the wife's adultery is sought to be established by proof that she has given birth to a child of which the husband is not the father. The fact of non-access can, however, be proved by evidence aliunde.—SWEENEY v. SWEENEY (1935), 1 L. R. 63 Cal. 1080.—IND.

- 2749a. -.]—The wife alleged that the husband had left her without cause & had, therefore, been guilty of desertion. The husband's case was that he left his wife because she stated that a child with which she was pregnant would have to be kept by him whether it was his or not. There was no attempt to negative access by the husband to the wife at any material time. In addition to the evidence as to the child, indecent literature had been found in the wife's possession & an indecent letter had been written by her :—Held : the statement by the wife, although amounting to a doubt with reference to the paternity of the child, was not an attempt by her to bastardise the child so as to be inadmissible in evidence under the rule in Russell v. Russell, but was an admission that at a material time a man other than her husband had had intercourse with her & was therefore admissible as evidence that the husband had reasonable grounds for leaving his wife.—ROAST v. ROAST, [1938] P. 8; [1937] 4 All E. R. 423; 107 L. J. P. 21; 157 L. T. 596; 102 J. P. 25; 54 T. L. R. 107; 81 Sol. Jo. 965; 36 L. G. R. 59; 30 Cox, C. C. 646.

- 2751a. Nullity suit.]-On a petition by the man for nullity of a marriage celebrated in Apr. 1933, the ct. found on the facts, subject to the admissibility of evidence, that the marriage had never been consummated by reason of the woman being frigida quoad hunc & that she had given birth to a child in Aug. 1935, after leaving the man in Sept. 1933, & had confessed intercourse with another man to whom she ascribed paternity. On these findings the ct. held that the evidence tendered was not rendered inadmissible in a case of nullity by the rule in Russell v. Russell, [1924] A. C. 687. The exclusion by that rule of the evidence of a spouse negating the legitimacy of offspring does not extend to the exclusion of evidence negating the existence of married intercourse. The right of the man to prove that the woman is unable to consummate the marriage with him cannot be destroyed by reason of her having given birth to a child who is from the nature of the case illegitimate.

In a suit for nullity of marriage for want of consummation there is no issue as to adultery; non-consummation once established, adultery becomes an irrelevant though necessary inference, as also bastardisation, when the birth of a child has occurred.—*FARNHAM v. He then informed his wife of the fact, but disclosed no name or address of the woman in question either to his wife or to her solrs. or to the King's Proctor to whom the papers in the case had been sent by the ct., although both the solrs. & the King's Proctor applied to him for these particulars. As the result of inquiries by the King's Proctor there was no evidence of any association of the husband with a woman other than his wife, still less of illicit association:—Held: the appeal must be allowed & a decree nisi granted on the ground that if evidence were tendered in good faith which under all usual circumstances clearly pointed to adultery, it was the duty of the ct. to act upon it, unless the King's Proctor could adduce cogent evidence to rebut the obvious conclusion, & in the present case there were circumstances on which the ct.

ought to be satisfied in accordance with what had hitherto been the practice that adultery had been established.—WOOLF v. WOOLF, [1931] P. 134; 100 L. J. P. 73; 145 L. T. 36; 47 T. L. R. 277, C. A.

2771a. Discretion statement in former suit.—In Dec. 1932, a husband presented a petition for divorce against his wife on the ground of her alleged adultery in which he prayed the ct. to exercise its discretion in his favour & filed the usual discretion statement. The petition was dismissed & it became therefore unnecessary to have recourse to the discretion statement. In Dec. 1933, the wife presented a petition for divorce against the husband at the hearing of which he did not appear. The wife then sought to use the admissions in the husband's discretion statement as evidence against him of his adultery:—Held: (1) inasmuch as it was not the practice of the Divorce Ct. to reserve discretion statements solely for the use of the ct. but to permit access to them by parties to the suits, they were analogous to depositions under Cos. Act, 1929 (c. 23), s. 214, & the evidence obtained by an inspection of them might be treated as admissions & used, if necessary, in other proceedings. Therefore, the wife was entitled to rely on the husband's discretion statement as evidence of his adultery; (2) this decision was based on the practice as it existed before Jan. 1, 1934, when the Matrimonial Causes (Amendment) Rules, 1934, came into force, & would apply only to divorce proceedings which had been commenced before that date.—*BEVIS v. Defender, who denied adultery, pleaded that pursuer's averments relative to the letter & envelope were irrelevant, & should not be remitted to probation:—Held: the mere facts that the letter in question had not been dispatched, or that it had been torn up were not sufficient to render it inadmissible as evidence, if it might be directly relevant to the issue under trial; & further, it might be so relevant as showing defender's state of mind at the time when it was written, & the relationship which existed between defender & co-defender.—*WATSON v. She needed no protection against interference from her husband, but she required orders for permanent maintenance & for custody. The judge, following his usual custom, asked petitioner why she prayed for judicial separation & not dissolution of the marriage. Petitioner stated that she did not wish her husband to marry the woman who had ruined her home:—Held: permanent maintenance & custody being, at any rate, a part of the purpose for which the suit was brought, petitioner had a right to a decree of judicial separation. The ct. had a discretion to refuse such a decree, but not an unlimited discretion, & that discretion must be exercised upon some legal ground, such as the absolute & discretionary bars & the ground that the suit was not brought bona fide, but only for some collateral purpose. It was not such a legal ground that the ct. thought it would be better that the relief to be granted should be dissolution, & not judicial separation.—BLANCHARD v. BLANCHARD (1928), 138 L. Some months after the desertion began the wife left Australia for England, & returned in 1931. During that time she had not heard of or from her husband. There was no evidence that any one who would be likely to have heard from the husband, if living, had done so:—Held: in the absence of proof of death, the wife was entitled to a decree nisi of divorce.—*SELWAY v. Immediately after the ceremony at a Registry Office the parties separated & had never seen each other since. At the end of that time, def. having refused to seek work & being unable to support pltf. & the children of the marriage, pltf. left the house & obtained employment in B. On Feb. 16, 1933, she signed a petition for the dissolution of her marriage on the ground of continuous desertion for five years & upwards as from Apr. 1927:—Held: on the facts, def.'s conduct towards pltf. was a result of mental infirmity caused by delusions consequent on his nervous breakdown, & did not amount to desertion without cause.—*STEPHENSON v. They arranged to marry, to execute a deed of separation prepared before marriage providing for the child, & then to part. After the marriage they executed the deed, parted, & lived separate & apart for more than three years. The ground for the petition was that the deed had been in full force for not less than three years:—Held: there had been a genuine agreement made after the marriage for an immediate separation & that the parties were relying upon a post-nuptial, & not as in Brodie v. Brodie, [1917] P. 271, upon a pre-nuptial, agreement, & the petitioner was entitled to her decree.—SMITH v. SMITH, [1937] N. Z. L. R. 94; 13 N. Z. L. J. 31.—N. Z.

She had told the husband & a friend on several occasions that she regarded herself as a single woman, & she went out at night against the husband's wishes & had pawned her wedding ring, but when this was done the spouses were in impecunious circumstances. During the whole of this period she refused her husband sexual intercourse:—Held: on these facts, desertion had not taken place.—TONKIN v. TONKIN, [1936] S. A. S. R. 100.—AUS.

At the end of three months she left & refused thereafter to resume cohabitation:—Held: the wife's conduct did not amount to a compliance with the decree, & therefore, that her husband was entitled to a dissolution of marriage.—*HARRIS v. He paid this sum for about a month & thereafter made no further payments. The parties had, while living together, kept a public-house, & after the separation petitioner took the licence of another public-house in order to support herself & her child. During their married life resp. drank heavily, but had many times made promises, which proved quite illusory, to give up drink. After the separation he saw petitioner on various occasions & made promises or suggestions to return, but they were quite fantastic, & were never carried beyond mere suggestion:—Held: although the fact that payments under a deed of separation have ceased is not sufficient evidence of repudiation of the deed, the further facts proved here showed a repudiation, & desertion had been proved.—*RATCLIFFE v. In 1929, a separation was signed by the parties, reciting that the wife was entitled to an order for maintenance in a ct. of summary jurisdiction & containing in the operative part a clause providing that they should live separate & apart & an agreement for the payment by the husband of 15s. weekly during the joint lives. Under this agreement the total payments made by the husband were £4 10s.:—Held: the parties did not separate under the separation agreement, & it was a mere incident in the desertion. The terms of the agreement were not observed by resp., nor sought to be enforced by petitioner. On the facts, there had been desertion for a period of three years & upwards preceding the date of the petition, & petitioner was entitled to a decree nisi.—*WATSON v. 2973a. Separation based on mistaken belief of invalidity of marriage—Revival of right to cohabitation by proceedings for maintenance.—The parties were married in England in 1912. In 1913 the husband left the wife & they formally separated in 1914 by consent under an agreement which at the time both believed to be valid, the wife receiving a sum of money in full satisfaction of all claims on the husband. Thereafter there was no change in the marital relations of the parties inter se & they remained apart & the husband later went through a form of marriage with another woman. The agreement was based upon the mistake of law that the marriage had been invalid by reason of it not complying with the law of the foreign domicile of the husband, & in 1929, in proceedings in which an order for maintenance of the wife made by a ct. of summary jurisdiction was upheld by a Divisional Ct., the agreement was held to be illegal. In 1934 the wife, relying on this decision & on the footing of her resulting right to cohabitation, sued the husband, who had returned to England, for judicial separation on the ground of desertion. In discussing the definition of desertion in Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald (1869), L. R. 1 P. & M. 694, 698, & similar cases & with reference to the necessary cessation of an existing state of cohabitation to constitute desertion, the ct. doubted whether time had ever ceased to run for the purpose of two years' desertion from 1913 onwards owing to the illegality of the agreement made in 1914, but:—Held: the wife, having reasserted her rights in 1929, the husband had now been guilty of desertion for not less than two years during the period since 1913.—PAPADOPOULOS v. PAPADOPOULOS, [1936] P. 108; 105 L. J. P. 21; 154 L. T. 242; 52 T. L. R. 190; 80 Sol. Jo. 56.

on the ground that a separation agreement prevented a finding of desertion.

In an action for divorce the existence of a separation agreement is not to be disregarded by the ct. merely because deft. does not set it up as a bar.—WALSH v. WALSH & KIRKLAND, [1925] 2 D. L. R. 794; [1925] 1 W. W. R. 951; 19 Saak. L. R. 509.—CAN.

(a) In General (p. 319).

2977a. Petitioner's adultery.—Upon a petition for divorce by a husband upon the ground that his wife had deserted him without cause for a period of at least three years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition, it appeared that the husband had been guilty of adultery during practically the whole of the statutory period. There was no evidence that the wife was aware of the adultery:—Held: there was no authority binding on the ct. which established that desertion was necessarily terminated as a matter of law when a spouse committed adultery after he or she had been deserted, regardless of the question whether the deserter knew of the adultery or whether it had any influence on his or her conduct. Under the statutory jurisdiction, adultery by petitioner committed after desertion by the resp. did not necessarily terminate that desertion. It was merely a discretionary bar, & in the circumstances of the present case, a decree nisi ought to be granted.—HEROD v. HEROD, [1938] 3 All E. R. 722; 159 L. T. 530; 54 T. L. R. 1134; 82 Sol. 2999a. —.]—Under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), justices are empowered on the application of a wife to make an order containing a provision that the applicant be no longer bound to cohabit with her husband, & this provision while in force has the effect in all respects of a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty. But where the wife's application is based upon a charge of desertion only, such a clause should not be inserted in the order, inasmuch as it prevents the continuance of desertion in strict law after the date of the order. In the present case the wife was granted a separation order on the ground of desertion, & the non-cohabitation clause was inserted in the order:—Held: the justices were entitled to find as they did, but were wrong in allowing the non-cohabitation clause to be included in the order. In cases of cruelty it might be necessary for the protection of the wife, but that was not so in cases of desertion; & the non-cohabitation clause was struck out.—SAYERS v. SAYERS (1929), 93 J. P. 72; 27 L. G. R. 366, D. C.

Sandler*, [1934] P. 149; Digest Supp., & therefore could not be the subject of relief under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57); (3) the charge of desertion against the husband since June, 1933, was made out; (4) the desertion continued till the presentation of the wife's cross-petition, & the period of desertion continued to run against the husband despite the presentation of his divorce petition, & nothing which the wife did by the presentation or prosecution of her proceedings altered that position; (5) the wife was accordingly entitled to a decree of divorce under Matrimonial Causes Act, 1937 (c. 57).

On the voyage out he wrote informing her that the appointment had been cancelled.

Thereafter he never lived with his wife or communicated with her again. From Apr. 1920 till June 1923 he was in prison, & in Oct. 1923 he was again imprisoned. In Oct. 1925, after his release, he wrote to his wife's father stating that he was about to go abroad, & offering to supply material for divorce:—Held: pursuer had relevantly averred desertion commencing in Nov. 1919 & including the of defender's incarceration, in habitation under the form of marriage last mentioned. It appeared that both the husband & the wife honestly believed at the time of the proceedings in the foreign ct. that those proceedings were competent & that their marriage was effectually dissolved:—Held: there was no guilty intention amounting to connivance on the part of the husband at the subsequent adultery of the wife, & further, although the facts might technically raise the discretionary bar of conduct conducing on his part, the latter offence was in the circumstances present of a degree which justified the exercise of the discretion of the ct. in his favour.—CLAYTON v. The case was remitted from assizes to the Divorce Ct. on the question of connivance:—Held: there was a strong case for the husband being an accessory to his wife's adultery, but, though almost terrified to be under the same roof as co-resp., he resented & resisted as far as he dared the continuance of the adulterous relations. He did not encourage it. They defied him. He was not an accessory, & did not enter into the deed with the idea of consenting to his wife's living in adultery with co-resp. Collusion is possible in a good case, i.e. although the ct. is convinced that matrimonial misconduct was proved, yet if evidence of collusion, too gross & palpable to admit of being overlooked or explained, appeared, no decree should be made.

In the present case the ct., having concluded that there was an arrangement between the parties to obtain a divorce & as to the testimony which should be offered to support the claim therefore, & that the testimony given by the resp. was in accordance with this arrangement, & largely untrue, refused the decree, holding that, aside from the admission as to the arrangement, the appearances of collusion were too gross & palpable to admit of being overlooked or explained, & that the arrangement itself was clearly collusive.—*SANBORN v. 3135a. ———.—[A husband & wife separated in the summer of 1935, there being no suggestion of adultery up to that time. Before parting, discussions had taken place as to a divorce based upon evidence to be provided by the husband, the wife even suggesting that, for the sake of the husband's career, he should divorce her, but this the husband refused to consider. There was some suggestion that a separation was all that was required, but subsequently the husband wrote to the wife to the effect that a divorce after a lapse of six months or a year would be better. Later the husband sent an hotel bill upon which the wife based a petition for divorce. The judge found that the wife at no time wanted a divorce & that she never really assented to the husband's proposal that, whatever the reality of the matter might be, she should present a petition on evidence which he would provide. The petition was later amended to include an additional charge of adultery with another woman:—Held: (1) if the petition as originally presented was tainted with collusion, no kind of amendment by adding a different charge would cure the defect; (2) the mere fact that the adultery charged is with a woman known or unknown on an isolated occasion at a hotel is not of itself evidence of collusion; (3) the reality of the case was that the wife decided to act upon the evidence of the hotel bill, not in pursuance of any existing understanding, but because for the first time she had made up her mind that it was the proper thing to do in the circumstances. The petition was accordingly not presented as a result of collusion, & a decree nisi ought to be pronounced.—WYATT v. WYATT, [1937] 3 All E. R. 885.

3185b. — Coercion.]—Resp., a solr., was anxious to obtain a divorce from his wife. In 1934 the wife had, with the approval of the husband, agreed to purchase a house, & found herself in the greatest straits to find £115 19s. 3d. required to complete the purchase. On Nov. 30, 1934, resp. wrote to his wife informing her of adultery at an hotel & suggesting action being taken thereon. On Jan. 28, 1935, the wife, who did not desire a divorce, instructed her solrs. to file a petition. On Feb. 4, resp. gave his solrs. a sealed envelope for transmission to his wife. Although there was nothing to prevent such solrs. sending the envelope direct to the wife, it was in fact sent to the wife's solrs. with a request that they would hand it to her on her next attending at their office. On Feb. 6 the wife attended at her solrs.' office, signed the petition for divorce, & received the sealed envelope, which was found to contain a cheque signed by resp. for £116. On Jan. 8 the wife's solrs. had written that upon all arrears due to her being paid to her account, the necessary steps "in the other matter" would be taken, & the clerk of those solrs. admitted that he deliberately withheld the envelope until the petition had been signed. The wife, petitioner, attempted throughout the proceedings to conceal from the ct. the motives for her actions:—Held: (1) it could not be held upon the facts that the collusive bargain was obtained by duress, so that, there being in law no bargain at all, there was no collusion; (2) the facts disclosed that, as petitioner did not desire a divorce, there was no real injury to her, & amounted to collusion & an abuse of the process of the ct.—*WOODS v. Though there had been full disclosure, if it was a collusive arrangement, no disclosure altered it. On the other hand, if the matter were susceptible of a sinister or an innocent interpretation, a full & candid disclosure might enable the ct. to adopt a more charitable view. 3449b. —.—The discretionary power of the ct. to grant a decree of divorce to a petitioner guilty of adultery is a regulated discretion which it is the duty of the ct. to reduce to method. The primary essential for the exercise of its power by the ct. is that there should be secured to it the means of knowledge of the material facts with reasonable certainty. With this end in view the fact that the exercise of the discretion is sought should appear on the face of the petition. There should be lodged along with the application for the certificate of a registrar that the proceedings are in order, preliminary to setting down, a statement of the matters in respect of which the exercise of the discretion is prayed & the grounds on which the petition in this behalf is based. The intervention of the King's Proctor following suppression of fact or presentment of falsehood by a petitioner in these matters is not the only safeguard for the observance of due procedure. A party to a divorce proceeding who is asking to have the discretion of the ct. favourably exercised & who in doing so acts in such a manner as to obstruct or divert the course of justice is guilty of a contempt of ct. & liable to its consequences. The multiplication of the tribunals in whom is vested the jurisdiction to decree divorce has rendered necessary a more precise procedure to secure the presentment to them of the facts in each case material to the exercise of the discretion &, if necessary, cases can then be adjourned for further consideration & the services of the King's Proctor made available. To formulate & limit with precision the grounds for the exercise of the discretion when the facts are once before the ct. is a practical impossibility; they cannot be rigidly defined but certain broad principles can be gathered from authority. The more strict & early view that two or at most three classes of cases only called for the exercise of the discretion savoured more of estoppel than of the powers of the ct. as defined by statute. Those two classes arose either when resp. had induced petitioner to believe in the death of resp. or

PART XIII. SECT. 7, SUB-SECT. 4.—D. (a) ii.

3446 i. Principle on which court acts.]—There is nothing in Marriage Act, 1915, s. 131 (1), to indicate that the general rule is that the discretion of the ct. should be exercised against a petitioner who has himself been guilty of adultery, or that it should only be exercised in his favour in exceptional circumstances. The discretion of the ct., on the wording of the section, is quite open. If anything, the words would appear to indicate that ordinarily the decree  nisi would be granted notwithstanding the adultery of the petitioner, but that in such a case the ct. is not bound to grant it. Under the section the ct. has an unfettered discretion, & it is neither desirable nor possible to lay down definite & rigid rules by which the ct. should be guided in all cases. The mere non-disclosure in his affidavit by a petitioner of the fact that he has during the marriage committed adultery is not a sufficient ground for refusing a decree  nisi to which he would otherwise be entitled.—ADAMS v. ADAMS, [1928] V. L. R. 90; [1928] A. L. R. 89.—AUS.

3446 ii. —.—A ct. administering divorce jurisdiction in India has a discretion, where petitioner has been guilty of adultery during the marriage, to grant or refuse a decree for dissolution. This discretion is unfettered, but must not be exercised capriciously. The dicta of English judges laying down tests in this matter do not constitute rules or principles which in any way fetter cts. in India.—LILLY SWAINE v. DENNIS SWAINE (1932), 1 L. R. 10 Man. 299.—IND.

3446 iii. —.—Pltf., after obtaining an American divorce from deft. which was invalid here, went through a form of marriage with X. & returned with her to Alberta where he has since resided with her. Deft. then married B. & lived with him in Alberta. There was a child of each second "marriage." B. obtained a declaration of nullity of his "marriage." Pltf.'s present action for divorce was based on the ground of deft.'s adultery with B. while living with him as his wife following her "marriage" to him:—Held: in order for pltf. to succeed it would be necessary for the ct. to exercise its discretion in his favour, &, under the circumstances, it would be wrong to do so; deft. could not fairly be held blameworthy for her adultery to a greater extent than he was for his; assuming that he thought he was free to marry after his divorce it must also be assumed that she too felt she was free to marry again; her adultery was condoned by his action in obtaining the invalid divorce.—SCHOOF v. SCHOOF, [1938] 1 W. W. R. 769.—CAN.

3448 i. It appeared from the evidence that petitioner had been guilty of an infraction of substantially all the matters set out in Divorce & Matrimonial Causes Act, s. 16, & that the wife was a very deeply injured woman without a stain on her character:—Held: although there is power to refuse petitioner a decree, the judge's discretion is left unfettered & absolute by the legislature. & it is in the best interests of the wife, in the circumstances, to be set free; the marriage will, therefore, be dissolved on condition that petitioner gives security for the maintenance of resp. in the terms of sect. 17 of the statute.—HARNEY v. HARNEY (1926), 39 B. C. R. 275.—CAN.

3448 iii. —.—Held: even if the evidence against the pltf. justified the inference that he had committed adultery, the circumstances of the case, including the interests of pltf.'s child, warranted the ct. in exercising its judicial discretion in his favour.—*WRIGHT v. when a petitioning wife had been forced by a resp. husband to lead an immoral life, & the question was treated as open whether condonation of petitioner's adultery constituted a third class. To-day these may be stated as guiding principles; a governing consideration is now the interest of the community at large in maintaining the sanctions of honest matrimony; a strong affirmative case is still necessary to justify the ct. in departing from the discretionary prohibition of relief to a guilty petitioner; it is manifestly contrary to law that a judicial discretion in favour of a litigant who has been guilty of adultery should be exercised when that course will probably encourage immorality: if the exercise is not unlikely to have that effect there is an argument against leniency. On the one hand condonation by a resp. of a petitioner's adultery is, though not so in the earlier time, admittedly now a ground for exercising the discretion; on the other hand, it is now a ground for refusing to exercise the discretion that the adultery of petitioner has in some serious degree conduced to that of resp. & conversely that a resp. should not escape the consequences of his or her proved adultery by putting forward similar acts of petitioner for which resp. was in any serious degree responsible. Further matters now considered are the interests of children, the position of a mother in whose care children are, & possible conditions as regards the future of the guilty parties. All these considerations are held to affect the interest of the community at large.—APTED v. APTE & BLISS, [1930] P. 246; 99 L. J. P. 73; 143 L. T. 353; 46 T. L. R. 456; 74 Sol. Jo. 338.

3502a. —.—A petitioner for divorce had admittedly, over a period of years, both before & after she left her husband, committed adultery in the nature of prostitution. It was found that the husband was aware of the fact, acquiesced in it, had received money which he knew was being obtained by prostitution, & that his treatment of her conduced to her adultery. Petitioner asked for the exercise of the discretion of the ct. in her favour:—Held: the discretion of the ct. ought to be exercised in petitioner's favour on the ground that (i) it was not in the interests of the state that the present state of affairs should continue, and there was no chance of the parties being reconciled; (ii) a divorce would give petitioner her one chance of living a decent life again; (iii) it was in the interests of the child of the marriage.—SHELDON v. SHELDON, [1937] 1 All E. R. 779; 106 L. J. P. 44; 156 L. T. 222; 53 T. L. R. 374; 81 Sol. Jo. 259.

Add the following case:—

fended, a woman named in the petition as having committed adultery with the husband was ordered to pay costs.

(2) As the prayer in the petition contained a claim for costs against the woman named, in accordance with an instruction of the senior registrar, dated June 4, 1927, the notice indorsed on the copy of the petition served on the woman was in the form set out in Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924, Appendix 1, in accordance with r. 2 of those rules, & the woman's name formed part of the title of the suit as resp.—*DAVIS v. Whether adultery a bar—Petition on ground of cruelty.—In an action for judicial separation the decision of the ct. in matters of defence must be governed by sect. 22 of Divorce & Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857. Therefore where the wife sues for judicial separation on the ground of cruelty the ct. cannot refuse to hold that her claim is barred by her adultery, where, at least, the cruelty had not conduced to her adultery or had made it dangerous for her to continue to cohabit with him.—*GARDINER v. 3778a. Discontinuance by solicitor—Grounds for—Petitioner suing as poor person—Adultery induced by petitioner.—This was a summons, adjourned into ct., by which the solrs. to whom the conduct of a poor person's divorce suit had been allocated by the Poor Persons' Committee of the Law Society sought to be relieved of their duty, with the approval of that committee. It was submitted on behalf of petitioner's solrs. that since the petition was filed in June 1929 there had been brought to their notice letters written by petitioner to his wife several years ago, which entitled them to discontinue to act. The registrar referred the summons to the judge, there being no precedent:—Held: the letters revealed had incited resp. to set up an adulterous intercourse & had not been disclaimed by petitioner. The order admitting the petitioner to sue as a poor person was dis-

3837a. Certificate of virginity by intervener—Onus of proof.—During the hearing of an undefended divorce suit, it appeared that the woman intervener had supplied petitioner's solrs. with medical certificates as to her virginity. She had refused the request of those solrs. that she should submit herself to examination by a doctor named by them. The matter was referred to the King's Proctor for inquiry. An intervention followed wherein it was alleged that the intervener had not committed adultery. At the hearing fresh evidence was called, but it was held that, though the certificates were, in fact, given in respect of the intervener, the evidence was sufficient to discharge the increased burden of proof upon the petitioner. The King's Proctor was ordered to pay three-quarters of petitioner's taxed costs of the intervention:—Held: this was not a case where the ct. required the case to be argued on behalf of the King's Proctor. Upon receipt of the papers, he might or might not take action, at the discretion of the Attorney-General, but, upon the latter deciding to take action, the King's Proctor became a party, & liable to be ordered to pay the costs of his intervention if that were unsuccessful.—

on the ground of his wife's adultery, failed in the affidavit in support of his petition, to disclose certain acts of adultery alleged by resp. against him, & also, failed to disclose the circumstances in which resp. left him:—Held: the non-disclosure in the affidavit of these facts was of itself, not a sufficient ground for dismissing the petition, but the petitioner should have been given an opportunity of explaining, if he were able, how the affidavit came to be drawn as it was.—McKAY v. McKAY, [1928] V. L. R. 6.—AUS.

3955a. ———— Petition for judicial separation.]—A wife, who was domiciled in England before her marriage, petitioned for a judicial separation on the ground of the alleged adultery in Germany of her husband, a Spaniard. The husband entered an appearance under protest, & subsequently filed an Act on Petition. On the wife applying by summons asking that the Act on Petition should be struck out:—Held: the petition & Act on Petition should be tried together on oral evidence, & further, an answer must be filed by the husband to the petition.—RIERA v. RIERA (1914), 112 L. T. 223; 31 T. L. R. 50; sub nom. RIEVA v. RIEVA, 59 Sol. Jo. 206.

3974a. ———— Sufficiency of.]—On summons for particulars of a charge of adultery, an order was made to give, at least ten days before the trial, particulars specifying dates & occasions, or petitioner to be precluded from giving other than documentary evidence in support of certain charges of adultery. A statement, purporting to be particulars, was given, but with scarcely any specification of dates & occasions. At the trial evidence other than documentary was objected to, on the ground that the order for particulars had in substance not been complied with:—Held: the evidence was admissible, & if the particulars were not sufficient, the proper course would have been to apply for further & better particulars.—CODRINGTON v. CODRINGTON & ANDERSON (1865), 4 Sw. & Tr. 63; 34 L. J. P. M. & A. 60 11 Jur. N. S. 287; 13 W. R. 527; 164 E. R. 1439.

3993a. ———— Reliance on discretion statement.]—Resp. to a divorce petition, the prayer of which asks for the discretion of the ct. to be exercised in favour of petitioner, is not entitled in pleading to treat this prayer as an admission by petitioner of his own adultery & as justifying thereby a cross-claim for dissolution of marriage on the ground of that adultery without giving any further particulars of the same. It is immaterial that petitioner must be aware of the facts & may have lodged his statement of them along with his application for the Registrar's certificate that the case is ready for trial.

Semble: this practice is still correct notwithstanding the dictum in Bevis v. Bevis, [1935] P. 86, 97, that the prayer of a petition, by including the prayer for the exercise of the discretion, is notice to resp. that petitioner has been guilty of adultery.—B. v. k i. ——— Pending appeal.]—The power, if any, of the ct. to grant interim alimony to a wife pending the disposition of an appeal by her to the Ct. of Appeal from a judgment at the trial dismissing her action for alimony, is discretionary & ought not to be exercised in favour of the wife where there has been nothing in the conduct of the wife to justify the exercise of such discretionary power in her favour.—CUMPTON v. sv. Not local master.]—In an action for judicial separation & alimony applications for interim alimony must be made to a judge in chambers ; a local master has no jurisdiction to entertain them.

Where an order for interim alimony has been made by a local master, such order is a nullity, but a judge in chambers has no jurisdiction to set it aside where the application to him is not by way of appeal.—VOLHOFFER v. sz. Such an order should not be made where the wife has been found guilty of adultery, unless special circumstances are shown to exist in her favour. The better practice is for the wife to apply to the trial judge for the continuance of alimony pending the appeal ; but if her application is made to the Ct. of Appeal it has the same power as the trial judge & the same right to exercise its discretion.—MILTON v. 4278a. — When appeal lies.]—The principle that the ct. will provide for the wife's costs of a matrimonial suit originally arose from the fact that on her marriage her property passed to her husband, but it still obtains, though at the present day the question is whether as a litigant she has sufficient separate estate wherewith to pay the costs of a solr. The power of a registrar under Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924, r. 91, to provide for the wife's costs is discretionary & not subject to review unless he has clearly proceeded on a basis which is wrong. He is entitled to take into consideration the capital & income of both parties & the nature & availability of it in arriving at a conclusion as to the "sufficient separate estate" of the wife within the rule. Among other matters the amount of an allowance under an existing deed of separation is a factor, although partly & primarily intended as an alimentary provision & not as a fund for defraying costs.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS, [1929] P. 114; 98 L. J. P. 40; 140 L. T. 383; 45 T. L. R. 157; 73 Sol. Jo. 77.

A result is that in a case where there are two co-resps. to a petition & a resp. wife gives evidence denying adultery with one of them, but gives no evidence with reference to the charge of adultery with the other of them, although also pleaded, she does not expose herself to cross-examination as to the latter adultery. A husband filed a petition against his wife for divorce on the ground of her alleged adultery with co-resp., but claimed no damages against him. He subsequently obtained an order from the judge under r. 30 (B) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924, that the issue should be tried before a special jury. The petition was twice tried, & on each occasion the jury failed to agree & were discharged. The husband then applied to the President for an order that the order for a jury which had been made should be discharged & that the petition should be tried by a judge alone. The President made the order. On appeal:—Held: under rule 30 (B) the President had jurisdiction to order that the further trial of the petition should be before a judge alone; the power given by that rule to direct the method of trial was not limited to one application & one order only, but enabled the ct. to determine from time to time what was the right mode of trial; also the order made by the President in the judicial exercise of his discretion was a proper one to make in the circumstances of the case. Per SLESSER, L.J., R. 4719a. ——— Damages previously recovered in enticement action.—Although the causes of action on a claim for the enticement of a wife & on a claim for damages in divorce against the same deft. in respect of adultery committed by him with the wife are not identical, the measure of damages in a case where there has been adultery may be practically the same under both causes of action. This applies to the loss of consortium & the loss of services of the wife as well as to the adultery. If the action for enticement is disposed of before a petition for divorce & all the circumstances relating to adultery must have been in the contemplation of the parties when the action was disposed of, practically all the damages available to the husband have been awarded in the action for enticement. Further damages are only obtainable in divorce if some grave matter for consideration has not been dealt with in the enticement action.

On the Bench being informed that it was open to the wife to apply for the order to the Divorce Ct. under r. 34 of Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924, the chairman said: "If that is the case, we think the application should be made there." petition should be dismissed with costs to the wife on the issue of her adultery & an intervener was given her costs against the wife. Before the trial orders had been made under which a total sum of £340 was brought into ct. by the husband to secure the wife's costs, & at the trial in Nov. 1932, the wife obtained an order for extension of the security. On Mar. 10, 1933, an order was made for payment of the wife's costs, less the sum paid into ct., to the wife's solrs.; but the husband, having previously taken an assignment of the intervener's taxed costs, set them off against the sum he was ordered to pay & only paid the balance. The wife's solrs. then obtained a garnishee order nisi against the husband's bank account in respect of the amount of the set-off. Subsequently Lord MERRIVALE, P., discharged the order nisi. On appeal:—Held: the wife's solrs. were not persons who had obtained a judgment or order against the husband for recovery or payment of any sum within R. S. C., Ord. 45, r. 1, so as to be entitled to a garnishee order; & (4) they had no lien upon the costs ordered to be paid by the husband to the wife that entitled them, having regard to R. S. The registrar refused to make an order for securing the wife's costs on the fact of the wife's admission being brought to his notice. At the trial of the suit on the husband's prayer the ct. granted the husband a decree nisi & made an order for the wife's costs “in the ordinary way.” A difficulty arose in the interpretation of the order, inasmuch as the usual order for security had not been made:—Held: though solrs. acting for a wife must avail themselves of the rules in the divorce jurisdiction for securing payment of the wife's costs from the husband, in this case the husband, until his wife's admission of adultery, had desired the success of his wife's suit, & therefore the ct. directed, in the exercise of its discretion, that the husband must pay his wife's costs properly incurred up to service of the summons for leave to file an answer.—*GODDARD v. —A husband petitioner suing as a poor person claimed & was awarded damages against co-resp. Co-resp. did not contest the issue of adultery, but contested the question as to damages. Petitioner asked for an order that co-resp. should pay petitioner profit costs. It was argued that the evidence indicated that co-resp. could afford to pay costs on the ordinary footing, & that this was a special circumstance within R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 31B (2), which enabled the ct. to make an order for the payment of profit costs:—Held: the fact that co-resp. had some means did not constitute a special circumstance within R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 31B (2), & co-resp. should not be ordered to pay profit costs.—JACKSON v. JACKSON & BARWELL, [1936] P. 214; [1936] 2 All E. R. 1588; 105 L. J. P. 93; 155 L. T. 324; 52 T. L. to know, is guilty of contempt of ct. & may be punished accordingly, & the decree nisi may, in the discretion of the ct., be rescinded. When the Solicitor-General intervenes, not on the ground of collusion, but "by reason of material facts not having been brought before the ct.," he does so as one of the public only & not in his capacity as Solicitor-General. Though it is his duty so to intervene upon the information being communicated to him, there is no jurisdiction in New Zealand to order the petitioner to pay the costs of such an intervention as the Solicitor-General is not, as Solicitor-General, entitled to costs, & regarded as one of the public, is not a party to the proceedings.

So held by REED, J., who held further, that adultery since the separation on which the decree nisi was based, with nothing more than non-disclosure to the ct. by the petitioner through ignorance of his duty to do so, was insufficient to cause the ct. to exercise its discretion adversely to him. The Judge drew attention to the fact that the law in New Zealand in respect to intervention by the Solicitor-General is practically identical with

D. 225, that no matrimonial offence before the deed or act of either party in relation thereto shall be pleaded, alleged or admissible in evidence, does not absolve a petitioner in subsequent proceedings, who has committed adultery before the deed, from the duty of making full disclosure to the ct. of the circumstances in which he or she asks to have exercised in his or her favour the discretionary power of the ct. to grant or withhold a decree. Although it is now established law that inter partes a covenant to condone & refrain from recrimination is not only not against public policy but positively beneficial, it is equally clear that no bargain of the sort can bind the ct. or limit the scope of its discretion. Parties can contract themselves out of their rights, but it is not competent for them to contract the ct. out of its duty.

Semble: for these reasons a petitioner who seeks the exercise in his or her favour of the discretion of the ct. to grant a decree nisi of dissolution of marriage is notwithstanding the existence of a covenant of the kind in question bound to include in the petition a prayer for the exercise of the discretion & to file the usual discretion statement, & to give notice to the other spouse of any allegation of conduct on his or her part, not referred to in the pleadings, which petitioner is making by way of excuse for his or her own adultery.

Although the facts are such as might warrant the exercise of the discretion, if disclosed as material facts at the hearing of the suit, their suppression then & the denial of them when set up in subsequent proceedings as cause for not making the decree absolute render the exercise of the discretion in such a case mischievous as an encouragement to perjury.—STUART v. She did not enter an appearance or apply for leave. The husband appeared but filed no answer. A decree was pronounced, but according to the practice named no woman. Six months elapsed & petitioner took no step to make the decree absolute, but eight months after decree nisi the woman named appeared as a member of the public pursuant to sect. 183 (2) of the Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), to show cause against the decree absolute. She filed an affidavit the gist of which was an allegation of collusion between the husband & the wife & a denial of adultery. The parties to the suit traversed these allegations. On a summons to strike out her appearance raising the question whether she came within the description of "any person" in above sub-sect., because she had been named in & served with the petition, & on a comparison of the authorities in which it was held that the right of intervention was not open to the parties to the suit, & on consideration of the material sects. of the Act of 1925, replacing the former legislation:—Held: mere service of the petition upon her did not make her a party to the suit; but as proceedings for divorce & the nature of the evidence adduced were not matters of personal litigation merely but also of public interest, intervention after decree nisi was a statutory right in the public interest, & until it was exercised the woman named continued to have the character of "any person" within the sect. & could obtain leave to intervene. When she had done so her right under the sect. disappeared, because she had then by exercising her right of intervention become a party to the suit.—*W—, M. J. v. W—, H. R. The statutory discretion given by sect. 23 (1) to the ct. to make such order "as may seem just" ought to be exercised with reference to the facts of the particular case, unfettered by any supposed settled practice. The mere fact that the Solicitor-General has not acted unreasonably in intervening is not a decisive reason why costs should not be given against him;

If after a decree for judicial separation & an order for the payment of alimony the marriage is put an end to by the decree of a ct. of competent jurisdiction the status of the woman as wife & her consequential right to alimony have ceased to exist. The order for alimony, however, which in its common form is limited till further order, remains effective till an application is made for its discharge.—PASTRE v. PASTRE, [1930] P. 80; 99 L. J. 5327a. — Children in custody of wife.—Petitioner having obtained a judicial separation from her husband by reason of his adultery, & also the custody of their two children, until the ct. should otherwise direct, presented a further petition praying the ct. to order resp. to pay to her a sum or sums of money for the past & future maintenance of the children. Resp., in answer, asked the ct. to order the children to be delivered up to his father & sister, who were quite prepared at their own costs to provide for the maintenance & education of them. The ct. refused to take the children out of the custody of their mother, & made an order upon resp. to contribute in a moderate extent to their maintenance.—MILFORD v. MILFORD (1869), L. 5330a. — Conduct of parties irrelevant.—Upon a husband's petition for the reduction of the amount of alimony payable to a wife under an absolute order, the only material matter for the consideration of the ct. is the ability of the husband to pay, & allegations in the petition with respect to the past conduct of the parties will be struck out as irrelevant, although the conduct of the parties is a material matter to be considered when the order for alimony is made.—HALL v. HALL (1914), 111 L. T. 403, C. A.

5330b. — & wife remarried.—(1) Where an order for maintenance has been made in favour of a wife who has obtained a decree absolute of divorce, & on a subsequent petition for reduction by the former husband it is established that his ability to pay has decreased, the effect of the wife's remarriage on her fortune may be considered in revising the quantum of maintenance.

(2) Where a maintenance order after decree absolute is expressed to be "until further order," the ct. may, if such order comes up for review, have regard to all the statutory factors available for consideration, as if on the original petition for maintenance.—*BENNETT v. 5360a. On lunacy of husband.]—The jurisdiction in lunacy to appoint a receiver of the estate of a person of unsound mind does not exclude other cts. from enforcing lawful claims against his estate, including claims arising in the Divorce Div. Although the primary duty of those concerned with the care of a person of unsound mind is to apply his estate for his maintenance, & there is power under Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 171, to direct a settlement of the property of a lunatic or defective, the Divorce Div. is not thereby discharged from the duty of providing for the permanent maintenance of a petitioning wife out of the estate of a husband of unsound mind. When by an order in lunacy a provision has been directed for the wife during the lifetime of the husband & pending his incapacity, & the Divorce Div. approve the quantum of the order, the proper course, on application in that Div. by the wife for permanent maintenance, is to order it to be secured to her at the rate ordered in lunacy so far as the husband's means permit & without prejudice to any further order in lunacy, the security not to be enforceable pending subsistence of the order in lunacy, & should it subsist during the life of the husband not to be enforceable till his death.—C. 5364a. ——— Delay.]—In allotting maintenance one of the statutory duties of the ct. is to have regard "to the conduct of the parties." If a wife obtains a decree in an undefended case it does not necessarily follow that her conduct, for example, in the matter of delay, was approved by the trial judge. Even if the judge disapproved of the delay, he still had a discretion to pronounce the decree. In an undefended case, therefore, on allegations of unreasonable delay being made in the maintenance proceedings, sufficient evidence must be received to enable the ct. properly to determine whether the allegations are established &, if so, how if at all the conduct in question should affect the sum of money which the husband should be ordered to secure &/or to pay.—CHAPPLE v. CHAPPLE (1929), 98 L. J. P. 95; 140 L. T. 699; 45 T. L. R. 273; 73 Sol. Jo. 207.

5365a. Although not raised in proceedings for dissolution.]—The rule laid down in Restall v. Restall, No. 5376a, that it is essential that the ct. in exercising its discretion to grant permanent maintenance should have before it all relevant evidence of the conduct of the parties, extends to a case of dissolution of marriage in which there has been no defence to the original petition, although the conduct in question might have afforded possible defences which would have been an answer if pleaded.

A petition for maintenance is a proceeding separate & distinct from the original petition for dissolution. A resp. who desires to raise in answer to the petition for maintenance, as conduct of petitioner, within Supreme Ct. of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1), matters which may have afforded a defence to the original petition is not estopped by his previous failure to plead them to the original petition.—MOULD v. MOULD, [1933] P. 76; 102 L. J. P. 21; 148 L. T. 499; 49 T. L. R. 242; 77 Sol. Jo. 117.

5365b. Not matters amounting to res judicata.]—(1) Though it is essential, as laid down in Restall v. Restall, No. 5376a, that in assessing maintenance for the wife the ct. should have before it all relevant evidence of the conduct of the parties before & after marriage, this rule does not allow the re-opening of an issue of fact already determined in proceedings for dissolution of marriage & consequently res judicata.

A petition for maintenance, though a proceeding distinct from a petition for dissolution, can nevertheless be proceeded with only as incidental to a petition for dissolution, & when the paternity of a child has not been disputed & has been established

A petitioner having obtained a decree absolute for nullity of marriage presented a petition under sect. 190 of the 1925 Act for permanent maintenance. Resp. in his reply made serious allegations of misconduct both before & after the marriage against petitioner. Petitioner filed an affidavit in which she dealt with the allegations of misconduct. The registrar refused leave to resp. to file a rejoinder & directed the allegations in the answer as to misconduct to be struck out. On appeal the judge confirmed the registrar's order & directed petitioner's affidavit in reply to be struck out. On appeal:—Held: the words “conduct of the parties” in sect. 190 (1) referred to the conduct of the parties both before & after the marriage, & in exercising its discretion under the sect. it was essential that the ct. should have before it all the relevant evidence of the conduct of the parties both before & after the marriage. Therefore, the order directing that the paragraphs in resp.'s answer containing the allegations of misconduct & the affidavit of petitioner in reply should be struck out must be set aside & leave would be given to resp. to file a rejoinder.—*RESTALL v. 5380a. —.]—Consideration of the amount of permanent maintenance which a divorced husband should be ordered to pay to his former wife.

The wife must be put in the same position as she would have been in had she remained his lawful wife (SHEARMAN, J.).—HULTON v. HULTON (1917), 33 T. L. R. 137.

5380b. — Matters for consideration.—The only considerations to be followed by the ct. in assessing maintenance are, first, whether there shall be any & what security for the maintenance ordered, & further, what sum if any it is reasonable to order to be paid in addition to the secured maintenance, having regard to the factors enumerated in the statute, namely, the fortune of the wife, the ability of the husband & the conduct of the parties.

A covenant by a husband to provide for his child by a former marriage may affect the ability of the husband, but is not to be regarded as a liability which is to be deducted as a matter of law from the assessable means of the husband on which the ct. has a discretion to allot reasonable maintenance.

The burden of an existing liability of the husband for costs incurred in legal proceedings between the husband & the wife may be considered under the directions of the statute as affecting the ability of the husband & also as arising out of his conduct.

A deferred liability for premiums on the purchase of a house no longer occupied as the matrimonial home of the parties is not a legal deduction from the assessable income of the husband.

In cases where security is ordered, the relative proportion of the whole of the maintenance order to the part secured is a material factor in the assessment of the maintenance. An order that a substantial portion of the maintenance shall be secured may justify an assessment at a lower total amount, secured & unsecured, of the whole maintenance.—CHICHESTER v. CHICHESTER, [1936] P. 129; [1936] 1 All E. R. 271; 105 L. J. P. 38; 154 L. T. 375; 52 T. L. R. 265; 80 Sol. Jo. 207.

5382a. —.]—Although the considerations which applied in the Ecclesiastical Cts. to awards of alimony must have due weight in determining the proper award of maintenance to a wife after a decree of divorce, the assumption of a fixed arithmetical rule & an indispensable process of applying that rule is erroneous, & disregards the duty imposed on the ct. by Jud. (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1) & (2). Where the husband's whole income has been expended on the requirements of the matrimonial home, a third of his means may well be required for the wife's maintenance; but where, beyond everything called for by such requirements, the husband possesses an ample fortune, the amount of his income affords no definite guidance as to the sum required to supply his sometime wife with the necessaries, comforts, & advantages incidental to her station in life.

Where the husband's gross income was £25,337 a year, derived mainly from his interest in a business concern, the registrar by his report submitted that the husband should be ordered to secure to his wife, who had divorced him, by way of permanent maintenance for her life, the annual sum of £3,500 less tax, & to pay to his wife during their joint lives the further annual sum of £500 less tax. The ct. confirmed the report.—GILBEY v. GILBEY, [1927] P. 197; 96 L. J. P. 55; 137 L. T. 31; 43 T. L. R. 283.

5382b. —.]—Resp., a husband, who had been divorced, re-married, & by an antenuptial settlement settled property, which included the matrimonial home & the chattels therein & the major part of his capital, on his wife in futuro. Petitioner, his former wife, had obtained an order for permanent maintenance of £400 a year & of £100 for her son, when resp.'s annual income was about £1,500. Subsequently, when resp.'s income, not taking into account the settlement, was about £4,500, petitioner applied for an increase in the amount of the order, on the ground that resp.'s means had increased. The registrar increased the order for permanent maintenance from £400 to £1,200 a year, less income tax, & from £100 to £150 a year, free of income tax, for the son:—Held: (1) resp.'s means had increased, as by sharing the advantages of the matrimonial home as of right settled upon his wife, a larger portion of the £1,500 unsettled income was left free to be dealt with by him & by the ct.; (2) the order could not be made disregarding the settlement, which subsisted; (3) an order for permanent maintenance, or an increase of it, should not be based on the income of the husband during a year of exceptional prosperity; (4) an order for permanent maintenance in such a case should not be based on the old practice of the Ecclesiastical Cts. in the case of a decree a mensâ et thoro, of granting to the wife one-third of the husband's available means, as the conditions arising from the two decrees were not the same, petitioner & resp. being divorced, & free to marry again; (5) in view of the increased means of the husband, having regard to the wife's fortune, the ability of the husband & the conduct of the parties, the order for permanent maintenance for the former wife should be increased from £400 a year to £750 a year, less income tax.—*N. v. 5383a. —. No fixed proportion.—In cases of dissolution of marriage, permanent maintenance is to be awarded on principles distinct from those governing the allotment of permanent alimony in judicial separation, which for the most part follow the practice of the Ecclesiastical Cts. Permanent maintenance is ordered pursuant to Supreme Ct. of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1), (2), on a statutable basis which gives the ct. a discretion & specifies the manner of its exercise. Considerations founded on the state of the law at the passing of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 32, which gave a husband possession of his wife's property, no longer attach since the legislation which from 1870 onwards has affected the status of married women.

There is no arithmetical rule of proportion in allotting the joint income between the spouses in cases of dissolution such as may still obtain in those of judicial separation; & in fixing what amount of maintenance for the wife is reasonable, having regard to her fortune, the ability of the husband & the conduct of the parties, the ct. is solely guided by its own discretion.—HORNIMAN v. HORNIMAN, [1933] P. 95; 102 L. J. P. 33; 148 L. T. 572; 49 T. L. R. 245; 77 Sol. Jo. 158.

Resp. did not present himself for medical examination & did not defend the suit & a decree nisi of nullity was pronounced. Petitioner filed a petition for maintenance. Apart from settled funds the means of resp. in respect of which maintenance could be ordered amounted to about £760 per annum; the means of petitioner were about £420 per annum. Further means of resp. arose under a covenant by a third party to a marriage settlement of the parties to the suit. The ct., in confirming the report of the Registrar that no case for maintenance was made out, distinguished other cases of nullity in which maintenance had been ordered having regard to the short duration of the cohabitation in the case before it & also on the ground that the third party to the settlement from whose covenant settled funds of the husband proceeded had entered into his covenant in the expectation of a valid marriage being contracted.—*CLIFTON (OTHERWISE PACKE) v. Where a consent order for alimony pendente lite, with “liberty to apply,” was made in a divorce suit when the husband resp. was & had been unfit to discuss his financial affairs with his legal advisers, the ct. held that on the application of the husband the registrar could review the order.—*ABBOTT v. 5405b. —————.]—Maintenance for a wife which the ct. may order on the dissolution of a marriage & the jurisdiction to review an order for it are matters of discretion conferred on the ct. by statute & not standardised by the rules applying in cases of judicial separation. The jurisdiction is now embodied in the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1), (2), & if an order for maintenance is limited “until further order,” the ct. in reviewing it should regard all the present circumstances of the case as if they had existed at the date of the original order. It may consider not only the descending income of the husband but the ascending scale of that of the wife. Even in the absence of the limitation relevant facts as to the fortune of the wife may have weight in relation to the discretionary power to review, if occasion arises under sect. 190 (2), by reason of the inability of the husband to pay. The ct. does not derive its power to review an order for maintenance from sect. 196. The Act is a consolidating, not an amending one, & the latter sect., having regard to its terminology, is limited in its operation to cases of restitution of conjugal rights.—*TURK v. The President made a declaration to the effect that, in accordance with what was the agreement of the parties in his view, the trustees of the settled funds specified should pay the annual sum fixed under para. Where after a lapse of eight years a husband resp. petitioned for a reduction in a consent order for maintenance, expressed to be made “unconditionally,” the registrar refused to make an inquiry on the ground that he had no power to vary such an order, as it contained no such words of release. On appeal the judge referred back the petition for investigation.—SMITH v. SMITH (1931), 145 L. T. 23; 47 T. L. R. 368; 75 Sol. Jo. 331.

5450. Add the following para. & citations:—On May 8, 1924, a wife obtained a decree nisi on the ground of her husband's adultery, which was made absolute on Nov. 24, 1924. On Dec. 22 the wife filed her petition for permanent maintenance, & on July 1, 1925, an interim order was made at the rate of £850 per annum for maintenance of the wife & her child. It appeared on the inquiry as to the husband's property that he had no capital other than chattels, but he was a sculptor who had been fortunate in obtaining work in connection with certain important war memorials, the payments for which had made his income up to £2,000 a year. There was no prospect of his continuing to earn nearly so large an income in the future. In July, 1925, before any final order for maintenance had been made, the husband assigned most of the moneys so owing to him to trustees of a settlement upon his second marriage, which he entered into on July 23, 1925.

order should contain a dum sola et casta vixerit provision. (2) Although the law enables the ct. to order the husband to secure to a divorced wife the amount ordered to be paid to her for alimony, there is no authority, without his consent, to deprive him of his property & to order its transfer to the wife.—OLYNK v. OLYNYK, [1932] 1 W. W. R. 825; 2 D. L. R. 785; 26 Alta. L. R. 485.—CAN.

This settlement did not attempt wholly to defeat petitioner, for it set aside £1,500 to satisfy any order that might be made against him for maintenance during the following three years. On Nov. 18, 1925, the registrar made a final order for the payment of maintenance to the petitioner at the rate of £550 a year for petitioner & £100 for the child, & for security to be given by the husband for a further £150 a year for life. On cross-applications by petitioner that the security should be given for £250 a year, & to admit of this being done that the settlement by the husband on his second marriage should be set aside, & by the husband that no order should be made for security:—Held: by HILL, J., although the Divorce Ct. had power to restrain a resp. husband by injunction from parting with his own property in order to defeat the claims of the petitioning wife to alimony or permanent maintenance which the ct. had already ordered, it had no power to set aside an assignment of his property made by him in consideration of a second marriage, even if the result might be to defeat the claim of the petitioner to maintenance not yet actually ordered. Therefore, the marriage settlement could not be set aside, but that the order of the registrar must be varied by increasing the annual payment to £700 for the petitioner & by omitting the order on the husband to give security for £150. On appeal by petitioner;—Held: by the Ct. of Appeal, the order of HILL, J., must be affirmed, & it was a fatal objection to petitioner's application to set aside the settlement that neither the trustees nor the second wife were before the ct.—[1926] P. 93; 95 L. 5452a. — By consent.—The ct. has no statutory power to order the payment of a lump sum by a resp. husband after a decree absolute for dissolution of the marriage by way of permanent maintenance for the wife petitioner. Where, however, both parties consent to such a course the ct. may make a consent order for the payment of the lump sum agreed upon.—JENKINS v. JENKINS (1930), 99 L. J. P. 63; 142 L. T. 656; 46 T. L. R. 309; 74 Sol. Jo. 170.

5452b. — —.—Although the ct. has no power under Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190, to order a lump sum to be paid to a wife by way of permanent maintenance, if the parties consent to such a course the ct. will make a consent order carrying out an agreement for the payment of a lump sum, or lump sums, & will include in the order a condition that no further proceedings be taken without the leave of a judge.—OLDING v. OLDING (1930), 99 L. J. P. 128; 143 L. T. 310; 46 T. L. R. 539; 74 Sol. Jo. 467.

5459a. No present order for maintenance justified—Future justification probable.—(1) Where the ct. cannot in the circumstances prevailing at the time of the application make an order for the maintenance of the wife under Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190, but is of opinion that in the event of a change in the circumstances such an order might properly be made at some time thereafter, the proper course is to make an order on the husband to pay a nominal monthly or weekly sum so as to keep alive the jurisdiction conferred upon the ct. by proviso (b) to sect. 190 (2); & thus enable it under that proviso to increase the periodical payments should the occasion for such an increase arise.

(2) The insertion of the words "liberty to apply" in an order for maintenance does not enable the wife at a subsequent date to make an effective application for increased maintenance should her husband's income increase, and those words, therefore, should not form part of the order.—STEPHEN v. STEPHEN, [1931] P. 197; 100 L. J. P. 86; 145 L. T. 541; 47 T. L. R. 478; 75 Sol. Jo. 442, C. A.

5469a. What court should consider.—(1) The ct. has no power to reserve liberty to apply for security in making an order for maintenance under Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1), (2), on a decree for divorce. The insertion of such a provision would permit the conversion at a subsequent date of an order to pay maintenance into an order to secure it, & this is ultra vires of the statute.

(2) In considering the question of security which must thus be ordered in the first instance, if at all, the interests of both spouses are to be considered. The maintenance ordered will be secured as far as circumstances permit, but in cases where the nature of the means of the husband renders it impossible to secure the whole maintenance proper to be ordered, the question arises whether it is in the interest of the wife to order security of a part, as compulsion of the husband to realise or transfer assets in order to give security under sub-sect. (1) may hamper him in earning the income out of which he may be ordered to make payments under sub-sect. (2). The wife has no greater inherent right to security than to an order for payment simply. Her right is to present maintenance, & if the property of the husband produces no present income or if an order for security would for any reason, such as the husband's absence from the jurisdiction, be unenforceable, it is more in the wife's interest that an order for payments should be made than an order to secure.

In Feb. 1927, an agreement was entered into whereby deft. was to continue to pay £182 per annum but the payments were to be quarterly. The agreement also provided, inter alia, that each party should give to the other full discharge of all sums claimed & that all actions, claims, demands at law & otherwise were withdrawn by consent. Payment fell into arrears & pltf. brought an action in the Mayor's Ct. for the amount then owing. The defence was withdrawn & judgment consented to. Payments again fell into arrears & the present action was brought in respect of them. Deft. contended that, as the agreement provided for the payment of a sum which deft. was already liable to pay, it was void for want of consideration. Pltf. replied that deft. was estopped from relying on this defence by the proceedings in the Mayor's Ct. which arose out of a breach of the same agreement:—Held: (1) there was no estoppel inasmuch as there was no evidence that judgment in the Mayor's Ct. was based on the agreement. It might have been consented on because the money was in any event due under the maintenance order; (2) the settlement of all accounts & claims was good consideration for the agreement & the pltf. was entitled to succeed.—*MANN v. They accordingly cohabited for ten months, when they again separated:—Held: the agreement to live together & resumption of cohabitation implied an agreement by both parties that the husband should be released from his obligations under the maintenance order, & an information by the wife against the husband for failure to comply with the order was rightly dismissed.—*STOKES v. 5498a. — Amount of deduction.—(1) In estimating the disposable income of a divorced husband after meeting his liability for taxes for the purpose of allotting permanent maintenance to his wife in future within the principle of Dayrell-Steyning v. Dayrell-Steyning, No. 5498, the amount of deduction from his gross income in respect of income tax & super tax is the amount of those taxes chargeable on income received during the current year.

(2) There is no fixed rule that the ct. will allow to the wife one-third of the husband's disposable income as permanent maintenance. It is no more than a rough working rule & does not impose an absolute limit. Further, in estimating the amount of the allowance the ct. must not focus its attention only on the disposable income of the husband in the year preceding the making of the order, but must have regard to his earnings in previous years & to his probable earnings in the future.

(3) In making an order for permanent maintenance the ct. is given a wide discretion by Supreme Ct. of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 190 (1), with which the Ct. of Appeal will not readily interfere unless it is satisfied that the ct. below has proceeded on some wrong principle.—*SHERWOOD v. In May, 1928, an information for disobedience of the maintenance order prior to the date of quashing was heard, & an order was then made that deft. be imprisoned until the maintenance order should be complied with:—Held: the maintenance order having been quashed, the justices had no jurisdiction to inquire into any disobedience of the order alleged to have been committed before it was quashed, & consequently the information ought to have been dismissed.—*GALLOWAY v. —After decree—Within reasonable time.]

—The wife's application for maintenance must be made within a reasonable time after the decree absolute. 5542a. — To order settlement where wife not domiciled in England.]—(1) The property of a guilty wife, amenable, under Jud. (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 191, to the jurisdiction to order a settlement of it, is prima facie the property of a woman in England & subject to English jurisdiction. That jurisdiction can be invoked against a person not domiciled in England, & in respect of property beyond the jurisdiction, only subject to the principle that English cts. will not infringe the authority of foreign tribunals in their domestic affairs, or adjudicate with regard to property when their judgment will be ineffective. Apart from jurisdiction over property, the exercise of jurisdiction in personam in such a case depends upon the question whether the party to be affected by it is within the reach of the compulsory process of the ct.

(2) The provisions of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 42, for service out of the jurisdiction, apply to the service of the petition in a suit, & not to proceedings for a settlement.

(3) The practice with reference to appearance to a petition for a settlement is governed by Divorce Rules, rr. 71 & 72, & (4) an appearance under these rules, qualified during the proceedings upon it, by denial of the existence of jurisdiction, is not to be regarded as a submission to that jurisdiction.—*TALLACK v. In such cases the ct. must be satisfied of a definite countervailing advantage for existing children. The extinguishment of a guilty spouse's interest & the consequent acceleration of an existing child's interest is not per se a sufficient quid pro quo, but, where substantial advantages are forthcoming, if need be by way of covenants outside the actual variation, the ct. will assent to the creation of such a new power.—NEWSON v. 5621a. Settlement on second wife—During subsistence of first marriage.]—(1) A husband made a post-nuptial settlement on his first wife, who subsequently divorced him. He later married another woman, who also divorced him. On an application by the second wife to vary the settlement under sect. 192 of Jud. Act, 1925, the ct. held that she was not entitled to succeed as the settlement was not made because of the marriage which was the subject of the decree of divorce on the second wife's petition, but was made in contemplation of or because of the marriage between the settlor & his first wife, which was subsisting at the time of the settlement. The legislature did not intend a spouse of an existing marriage to contemplate a second marriage so as to be able to execute a settlement which was "ante-nuptial" as regards such contemplated marriage when at the time the spouse was married & incapable of entering into a second marriage.

(2) An ante-nuptial settlement made by the husband on the second wife after the first divorce was also held to be incapable of variation on the petition of the second wife, the ct. having no power under sect. 192 to vary an appointment in such a way that the principal settlement would also be varied, though that settlement was not within sect. 192.—BURNETT v. 5624a. — Settlement not made in contemplation of marriage.—The expression “ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements,” in Jud. After decree absolute she executed a deed poll, declaring that her income under the settlement should be for her separate use without power of anticipation. Shortly after the execution of the deed poll she intermarried with co-resp. in the suit:—Held: the settlement was a “post-nuptial settlement” made on the parties whose marriage was “the subject of the decree,” & was therefore within the definition in Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192, of the class of instrument with which the ct. had power to deal under the sect.—*MELVILL v. 5625b. ——(1) In deciding whether a settlement comes within the meaning of “post-nuptial settlement” on the parties within the purview of Jud. Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 192, the material question is whether the settlement in question is upon the husband in the character of husband or on the wife in the character of wife or upon both in the character of husband & wife. Mere form is immaterial. The settlement may be one in the strictest sense or it may be, for instance, a covenant to pay by one spouse to the other or by a third party to a spouse. What is material is that the settlement should provide financial benefit for one or other or both of the spouses as spouses & with reference to their married state. (2) In dealing with a settlement under the powers conferred by sect. 192 the ct. will not be fettered in its application of the settled funds by remote & contingent interests therein of volunteers.—PRINSEP v. Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 191 (1), which confers upon the ct. a discretionary power after a decree for divorce or judicial separation to order a settlement of the property of a wife guilty of adultery for the benefit of the innocent party & the children of the marriage or any of them, is not intended to be used as a punishment of the wife or indirectly through the wife of a co-resp. whom she may marry. The main question for the ct. is the nature & extent of the pecuniary prejudice caused to the husband & children of a guilty wife by the breaking away of the wife with her property from the common home; the relative financial positions of the husband & wife after divorce are also material. The object of the sect. is to enable the ct. as nearly as may be to restore the pecuniary status of the parties as existing before the termination of the married life.—*MATHESON v. By varying the settlement accordingly the ct. may effect this acceleration for the benefit not merely of an innocent party but also for that of a guilty spouse on the basis (inter alia) of the interest of the children of the dissolved marriage, in the opinion of the ct. being adequately protected by the terms & conditions of the acceleration.—ALSTON v. ALSTON, [1929] P. 311; 98 L. J. P. 155; 141 L. T. 542; 45 T. L. R. 642; 73 Sol. Jo. 544.

5680c. —.]—In variation of settlement after divorce the interests of children of the dissolved marriage are a principal concern of the ct., but it is contrary to usual practice that an innocent spouse should suffer a curtailment of powers conferred by the settlement. In a case in which the settlement gave each spouse power to withdraw funds from settlement & resettle them on a second marriage in the lifetime of the other spouse, the ct. reduced the power of a guilty wife to resettle but refused to diminish the power of resettlement by an innocent husband, holding that the interest of the child of the dissolved marriage was sufficiently secured by the diminution of the powers of resettlement by the wife.—COLCLOUGH v. COLCLOUGH & FISHER, [1933] P. 143; 102 L. J. P. 87; 149 L. T. 287; 49 T. L. R. 434; 77 Sol. Jo. 338.

5684a. Power of withdrawal after death of spouse—Acceleration.—By an ante-nuptial settlement, the wife's parents brought into settlement property worth £240,000, & the husband brought in property worth £10,000. The wife was to have the income from her fund for life, & the husband the income from his fund for life. After the death of the survivor, the trustees were to hold the property brought into settlement for the children or remoter issue of the marriage as the husband & wife should jointly appoint, & in default of appointment, in trust for the children of the marriage in equal shares. The survivor of the husband & wife was given a power after the death of the other, & either in contemplation of, or after, his or her future marriage, to appoint that part of the capital should be withdrawn from the settlement, & be held upon such trusts for the benefit of the after-taken husband or wife or such survivor & the issue of such future marriage. The power of withdrawal was limited to one third part if there were two or more children of the marriage who should attain twenty-one, or, in the case of a girl, marry under that age, & was limited to a half if there should be only one such child. There were two children of the marriage, & a decree nisi having been made for the dissolution of the marriage upon the petition of the wife, based on the adultery of the husband, the registrar recommended: (i) that the joint power of appointment over the wife's fund should be revoked, & that the wife should exercise that power as if she had survived the husband, & no objection was taken to this; (ii) that the power of withdrawal should be exercisable forthwith by the husband or the wife as if the other had died in his or her lifetime.—Held: (1) if the wife should secure a sum of £250 per annum gross to each of the two children on attaining the age of twenty-one or on marriage, her power of withdrawal should be varied as prayed; if she failed to secure such annual sum to the children, then her power of withdrawal should be varied as prayed, but should be limited to two-thirds of the amount which she was empowered to withdraw upon the death of the husband; (2) the husband's power of withdrawal should not be varied in any way.—WADHAM v. WADHAM, [1938] 1 All E. R. 206; 82 Sol. Jo. 115.

5751a. Leave unnecessary.]—(1) The intention of Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1924, r. 29A, is to extend to ancillary proceedings in matrimonial causes the power to serve them abroad without leave, which in the case of principal petitions for dissolution of marriage has existed since the passing of Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (c. 85), s. 42. A petition to vary a marriage settlement is such an ancillary proceeding, & R. S. C., Ord. XI., r. 8A (b), which covers it & is imported by Matrimonial Causes Rule 29A, is merely machinery for giving effect to r. 29A.

R. S. C., Ord. XI., r. 1, does not apply, & there is no such limitation on service of divorce proceedings abroad without leave as is imposed by R. S. C., Ord. XI., in the case of writs of summons.

(2) The ct. has power to set aside service abroad, if it is impossible to make an effective order on the person served. A petition to vary a settlement was served without leave in New York on American trustees of the settlement. There was expert evidence that no action could be maintained in New York on a foreign judgment against a deft. who had not been personally served within the jurisdiction of the foreign ct. pronouncing the judgment, & that the same consequence would attach even if leave had been given by the foreign ct. for service out of its jurisdiction:—Held: although the service was good under the rules of the English ct. if effected abroad without leave, it should nevertheless be set aside on the general ground that no effective order could result against the party served.—*GOFF v. The payment of arrears due under the order cannot, therefore, be enforced after the husband's death against his estate, & that is so whether the estate be solvent or insolvent. (2) A wife filed her petition for dissolution of marriage on Feb. 26, 1929. In the petition she confessed to certain acts of adultery & asked the ct. to exercise its discretion in her favour. On June 28, 1929, the ct. made an order for alimony pendente lite. The husband paid alimony under the order until the end of May, 1930, but made no payment thereafter. On Aug. 1, 1930, the King's Proctor intervened, alleging that petitioner had been guilty of adultery otherwise than as disclosed in her petition. On Nov. 12, 1930, the intervention was allowed, but the petition remained on the file. The husband died in Apr. 1932:—Held: even if payment of the arrears due up to Nov. 12, 1930, could have been enforced against the husband's estate, the order for alimony ceased to operate on that date by reason of the finding, on which the allowance of the intervention was based, that the wife had been guilty of the undisclosed adultery.—*Re HEDDERWICK, MORTEN v. 5984a. ——— & maintenance.—Husband in prison for non-payment of costs.]—A wife obtained against her husband an order for restitution of conjugal rights, followed by an order for maintenance, & an order for costs against the husband. In default of payment of these costs an order was made for payment within 14 days & on further default, the husband, who had considerable means, was committed to prison. The wife applied for the appointment of a receiver of certain property belonging to the husband & for an order that the receiver should use the proceeds thereof in payment of the arrears of maintenance & the costs above mentioned. An order was made for the appointment of the receiver & for the payment out of the proceeds of the property of the arrears of maintenance, but not of the costs. The wife appealed :—Held : no distinction could be drawn in respect of the two debts, & notwithstanding that the husband had been committed to prison for non-payment of the debt in respect of the costs, it remained a valid debt & it should be paid out of the proceeds of the property in respect of which the receiver had been appointed.—*JINKS v. 5995a. ——— Restraint from receipt of dividends.—Until payment of costs.]—A wife was granted a decree of judicial separation on the ground of her husband's cruelty in an undefended petition, & an order for permanent alimony for herself & her four children was made at the rate of £950 a year. The husband had capital of at least £40,000. When each instalment of alimony became due he adopted an attitude of passive resistance, & on three successive occasions she secured payment only by execution on her husband's household effects, & on one occasion she secured a charging order on certain of his securities for the payment of a monthly instalment accrued due. Therefore she applied for an order to secure, under the control of the ct.

or of a receiver, sufficient of the husband's capital from which payments of the monthly instalments could be made to her as they became due. The judge held that owing to a defect in the matrimonial law the ct. had no power to grant the relief asked for. The summons must be dismissed, but the husband would pay the wife's costs :—Held : under the law as it now stood, the husband could not be treated as in contempt with regard to future payments, but as he was in contempt as regards past payments & had expressed an intention to disobey the order for alimony as regards future payments, the ct. while not overstepping the proper limitations with regard to future payments, would make an order restraining him from receiving any dividends in respect of investments to the extent of £395 16s. 8d., being the amount of the arrears of alimony & costs, directing that the solr. of resp. should receive the dividends & pay the same to the petitioner, & would give liberty to apply in chambers in regard to future arrears.—*BURROWES v. The husband failed to pay these costs by reason, as the ct. found, of his lack of means. The wife, as the ct. also found, did not move the ct. to make the decree absolute, hoping in that way to force the husband to pay the costs. The husband brought this motion to make the decree absolute. The wife resisted the application, & by a cross-motion asked that the decree might be rescinded & that she might be granted a decree of judicial separation :—Held : the

ct. in the exercise of its discretion should allow the decree to be made absolute, because, although the husband was technically in contempt, such contempt was due to his misfortune rather than to his fault.—GOWER v. This bench of justices overruled an objection that the matter was already res judicata, & that no new evidence had been adduced, & made an order in favour of the wife for 25s. a week. The husband appealed:—Held: a ct. of competent jurisdiction had found that the wife had refused to live with her husband & revoked the previous maintenance order. tenance Act, R. S. S., 1920, s. 2 (2), is not exclusive on the question as to whether a wife has been deserted within the meaning of the Act; but it is possible for a wife living apart from her husband to be "a married woman deserted by her husband," although the living apart is not due to the husband's legal cruelty or to his neglect or refusal to supply her with necessities. If the husband without being legally cruel has left her & gone to live elsewhere she is a deserted wife; she also is a deserted wife if he, without being guilty of such cruelty, has ordered her out of the house where he continued to reside.—*SCHWAB v. (2) There is no absolute rule of law or evidence in such a case that corroboration of the wife is necessary, or as to the extent of that corroboration; but there must at least be sufficient general evidence for the ct. to infer that the acts occurred, that they were committed without the assent of the wife, & that injury to her health resulted, before the ct. can find constructive desertion as a fact.—*D. In such a case, time commences to run from the date of the commission of the adultery, & not from that of its discovery.

(2) Where a wife leaves the matrimonial home upon the discovery of her husband's adultery, this can amount to constructive desertion by the husband only if it is shown that there is an intention on the part of the husband to persist in the adultery. The discovery of a past adulterous association is insufficient.—TEALL v. TEALL, [1938] P. 250; [1938] 3 All E. R. 349; 107 L. J. P. 118; 102 J. P. 428; 54 T. L. R. 960; 82 Sol. Jo. 682; 36 L. G. On the husband failing to continue payments under the agreement, the wife took out a summons under Summary Jurisdiction (Separation & Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1925 for an order against her husband, on the ground that he had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for her & her infant child. The justices dismissed the summons, holding their jurisdiction was ousted by the undertaking of the wife, & the proper forum for her claim was the county ct.:—Held: as the payments under the agreement had not been maintained by the husband, the justices had jurisdiction, & if a case of wilful neglect were proved, to make an order, at any rate for an amount not exceeding 17s. 6d. a week.—*MC CREANNEY v. After the marriage differences arose between the wife & her mother-in-law which resulted in the wife's leaving the husband. The wife summoned the husband for wilful neglect to provide her with reasonable maintenance. The husband offered to take her back to the mother's house, & said that it was the only home which he could afford to provide. The justices made a maintenance order for £1 a week for wife & child. The husband appealed:—Held: the justices were right. The husband's first duty was to provide his wife with a home according to his circumstances. The justices were right in holding that, by reason of the difficulty about the husband's mother, he had failed in that duty by putting his mother first. In view of his small earnings the wife's allowance was reduced from 15s. to 12s. a week. Otherwise the appeal failed.—MILLICAMP v. MILLICAMP (1931), 146 L. T. 96; 95 J. P. 207; 75 Sol. Jo. 814; 29 L. G. R. 671; 29 Cox, C. C. 391.

She had left the house with the infant child of the marriage after an altercation. The magistrates made an order against the husband for the payment of 30s. a week. The husband appealed:—Held: the wife had not made out her complaint, & the order must be discharged.—JACKSON v. JACKSON (1932), 146 L. T. 406; 96 J. P. 97; 48 T. L. R. 206; 76 Sol. Jo. 129; 30 L. Subsequently she wrote suggesting reconciliation, but the letters were unanswered. The husband contributed nothing to her support except a sum of 10s. & her tram fare to Adelaide, & almost eight months after she had left him definitely refused to take her back or support her. On these facts the magistrate granted relief for neglect to maintain, but refused to grant relief for desertion on the ground mentioned above:—Held: desertion should have been found by the special magistrate.—*MORGAN v. While he had been in receipt of "emergency relief" payments he had been offered employment on farms & told of possibilities of obtaining such employment but had refused to accept or act upon them on the ground that the work would involve separation from his family. He had also been offered work on a highway but refused it because it would require him to walk too far from where he lived:—Held: his objections to said work did not constitute a "lawful excuse" within sect. 242 (3).—*R. Neglect to maintain.]—A divorce may be granted on the ground that a husband habitually & wilfully failed during the five years preceding the commencement of the action to pay maintenance to his wife, notwithstanding that during some months of that period he lived, without cohabiting, at the same house as his wife & children, & paid board & lodging.—*COULTER v. to maintenance even though she did not carry out her marital obligations.

The marriage took place twenty-two years ago, & there were a number of children. In Jan. 1929 the parties separated. Soon afterwards the wife summoned the husband for desertion, & her summons was dismissed. Later, solrs. for the wife wrote to the husband that she was willing to live with him again & make a fresh start. On Mar. 27, 1931, she summoned him for alleged desertion & wilful neglect to maintain her. At the hearing on Apr. 2, the justices heard the complaint on the basis that it was one for wilful neglect, & dismissed the summons. The wife appealed. The husband was not represented:—Held: the legislature had not provided that a married woman, who had not committed adultery, might in any circumstances whatever be entitled to an order for maintenance. The law still took account of the mutual character of marital obligations. The justices had thought that the wife had renounced her wifely duties, but the summons would be sent back to them so that they might state their precise reasons for their conclusion.—CLARK v. CLARK (1931), 145 L. T. 487; 95 J. P. 170; 75 Sol. Jo. 616; 29 L. G. R. 559; 29 Cox, C. C. 339, D. C.

6128b. Effect of separation deed.—This was an appeal from the decision of a metropolitan police magistrate dismissing a summons by a wife on the ground of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance. She had entered into a common form separation deed which provided for the payment to her by the husband of £2 a week. The payments fell into arrears, & a judgment against the husband went unsatisfied. In the following year the wife entered into a deed by which in return for the payment of a lump sum to start her in a new life in Canada, both spouses covenanted (inter alia) not to petition for judicial separation, restitution of conjugal rights, or divorce, & the wife covenanted in all respects to support & maintain herself & indemnify her husband against all liabilities into which she might enter.

The wife was paid the money & went to Canada. She had a breakdown & returned to England. She summoned her husband for wilful neglect, & said that he had become substantially better off. The summons was dismissed. She appealed:—Held: there was no evidence to show whether or not the magistrate had considered himself bound by the effect of the separation deeds to dismiss the summons. Whether the later deed operated as a final release of the husband was still an open question. It had never been decided what was the effect on the magistrate's matrimonial jurisdiction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts of a wife's agreement to waive maintenance. Order rescinded, so that the matter might be reconsidered by the magistrate.—BURTON v. BURTON (1929), 142 L. T. 165; 94 J. P. 32; 29 Cox, C. C. 26, D. C.

6133a. Jurisdiction to make—On summons for maintenance.—Where a wife under Summary Jurisdiction (Separation & Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1925, merely asks in her summons for an order for maintenance on the ground of wilful neglect it is improper for justices to decree a separation or make an order for the custody of children.—*SMITH v. 6133b. Non-cohabitation clause unnecessary—Should not be included.—Although the husband's previous conduct may have been such as to justify the wife in refusing an offer by him to resume cohabitation, it does not follow, if her complaint is on the ground of desertion, that the justices should stereotype the separation of the parties by inserting in their order a non-cohabitation clause, & transferring the custody of the children.—*THOMAS v. 6137a. Rule not applicable to wage-earners.—This was an appeal from a maintenance order granted to a wife by the justices on the ground that her husband had wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance. The husband was earning £3 a week, & the wife, in addition to living rent free as a caretaker of flats, was earning from 10s. to 15s. a week as a waitress. The magistrates made an order that the husband should pay his wife £1 a week, & the order

"Means of support" means money or property convertible into money which may be applied for such subsistence, and "adequate means of support," means such money or convertible property as being applied to such subsistence suffices for the purpose. included a non-cohabitation clause. The husband appealed:—Held: the non-cohabitation clause was unwarrantable & must be struck out. 6177a. ———.—New facts.]—In May, 1936, a wife, who at the time was living separate from her husband, applied to a certain bench of justices for maintenance on the ground of desertion & wilful neglect to maintain. The justices dismissed the summons, having found that the husband was then making a genuine offer to take his wife back & provide her with a home, & that she was unreasonably refusing to accept that offer. In May, 1937, the wife applied to another bench of justices who were fully aware of the circumstances relating to the former order. The husband made a new offer to take his wife back, but the justices found that he was not telling the truth when he made the offer, & that it was an offer which the wife was not obliged to entertain. The justices accordingly made an order for maintenance. The husband appealed on the ground that it was for the wife to show that some new circumstance had arisen to justify her in bringing the new case, & she had taken no steps in the interval between the first & the second applications:—Held: the justices' findings in May, 1937, constituted a fresh set of facts, & the justices were entitled to come to the conclusion to which they had come.—BALCHIN v. BALCHIN, [1937] 3 All E. R. 733; 157 L. T. 392; 81 Sol. Jo. 653; 35 L. G. R. 486; 30 Cox, C. C. 620, D. C.

6177b. ———.—Four summonses dismissed—Fifth summons on same cause of complaint.]—On an appeal by a husband from an order directing him to pay his wife £1 a week for maintenance on the ground of his desertion, it was shown that four previous summonses taken out by the wife in the same ct. for desertion had been dismissed, & that the fresh proceedings disclosed no new facts. The order was discharged on the ground of res judicata.—WALL v. WALL (1930), 94 J. P. 200; 94 J. P. Jo. 303; 28 L. G. R. 477, D. C.

6179a. ———.—A wife's right to claim & obtain an order for maintenance from a bench of justices under Summary Jurisdiction (Separation & Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), is not necessarily barred by a deed of separation which makes an allowance for her maintenance, but it must depend on the terms of the deed whether she is or is not deprived of that right.—DIGGINS v. DIGGINS, [1927] P. 88; 96 L. J. P. 14; 136 L. T. 224; 90 J. P. 208; 43 T. L. R. 37, D. C.

6179b. -.]—A wife entered into a separation deed under which the husband covenanted to pay her dum casta during joint lives one-third of the joint incomes, his income to be ascertained in a prescribed manner & any dispute relating thereto to be settled by arbitration. After a small sum had been paid a dispute arose, & the wife was granted a maintenance order for £2 a week, on the ground of wilful neglect to maintain. The husband appealed on the ground that the jurisdiction of the magistrates was barred by the deed, but it was held that there was nothing in the deed to exclude the wife's statutory remedy, & the appeal was dismissed.—ILES v. ILES (1931), 145 L. T. 71; 95 J. P. 136; 47 T. L. R. 396; 75 Sol. Jo. 359; 29 L. G. R. 537, D. C.

6179c. -.]—An agreement for separation between husband & wife providing payments by the husband for the benefit of the wife, coupled with an agreement by her not to make any claim for maintenance or to institute proceedings for that purpose, does not oust the jurisdiction of the ct. under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), & Summary Jurisdiction (Separation & Maintenance) Act, 1925 (c. 51), to inquire whether the husband has been guilty within the Acts of "wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance." The deed is of merely evidential value in proceedings for maintenance under the Acts & does not act as an estoppel, although it might have had that effect in proceedings at common law.—MATTHEWS v. MATTHEWS, [1932] P. 103; 101 L. J. P. 41; 147 L. T. 240; 96 J. P. 290; 48 T. L. R. 511; 76 Sol. Jo. 495; 30 L. G. R. 385; 29 Cox, C. C. 503, D. C.

The justices made an order for fifteen shillings a week, with a non-cohabitation clause. The husband appealed:—Held: the cheerful return of the wife to cohabitation & her affectionate letter were strong evidence that she did not look upon the quarrel incident as cruelty, & there was no evidence of persistent cruelty. Order discharged.—GOODMAN v. GOODMAN (1931), 95 J. P. 95; 29 L. G. R. 273, D. C.

6184a. Form in accordance with repealed Act—Magistrates acting upon own knowledge—Order set aside.—A husband & wife had entered into a deed of separation & the wife took out a summons for wilful neglect to maintain in the terms of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), in disregard of the amending Act of 1925. Notwithstanding that the summons had been misconceived, the magistrates acting upon their own knowledge made an order in the terms of the summons without calling upon deft. for a statement or an explanation on oath of what appeared to the magistrates to be essential matters:—Held: the case had not been tried out & the order in its present form must be set aside.—CHURCH v. CHURCH (1933), 148 L. T. 432; 97 J. P. 91; 49 T. L. R. 206; 31 L. G. R. 185; 29 Cox, C. C. 592, D. C.

6184b. Adultery—Particulars.—A summons by a wife for arrears of maintenance had been twice adjourned by reason of a statement by the husband that he intended to take counter-proceedings for the discharge of the order on the ground of the wife's adultery. Upon the summons coming on again the husband took out his counter-summons returnable on that same day & the case was then heard. The wife was offered an adjournment, which she refused. The summons merely charged adultery by the wife in general terms, not specifying with whom the adultery was committed, or any time or place; but a letter was handed to the wife with the summons stating that she was accused of committing adultery with a named person & had been living with him for 4 years:—Held: (1) there is no specified length of time for a return to a summons issued by a ct. of summary jurisdiction, & it is a common practice when a party is before the ct. to issue a supplemental summons returnable on that day; (2) it is very desirable that a summons should state particulars of adultery, but it is not bad in law if it does not do so; (3) any irregularity there might have been had been waived by the party continuing the case before the justices; (4) in all the circumstances & in view of the serious charge made against the wife & the alleged adulterer, an order should be made for a further hearing, but the wife should have no costs of the appeal.—OLDING v. OLDING, [1936] 3 All E. R. 189; 155 L. T. 528; 100 J. P. 524; 80 Sol. Jo. 955; 30 Cox, C. C. 479; 34 L. G. R. 616.

WILLIAMS* (1928), 93 J. P. 32; 27 L. G. R. 4, D. C.

6191b. Degree necessary.]—On an appeal from a maintenance order made by the magistrate on Mar. 18, 1932, finding that the husband had deserted his wife in 1915, & directing him to pay her £2 a week, it was submitted that there was no corroboration of the wife's evidence as to desertion:—Held: the strict law of corroboration by independent evidence required under the ecclesiastical procedure in proceedings for desertion in the Divorce Ct. was not necessarily applicable to the matrimonial jurisdiction in the police cts. Nevertheless it was obvious that in matters of the greatest consequence between man & wife to act on evidence unsupported by a body of facts would be dangerous. When one found that during seventeen years the husband had not lived with his wife, & had not provided her with maintenance, there was a body of facts which, unless satisfactorily explained by applt., established the wife's case. The magistrate took the right view. The appeal was dismissed with costs.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS (1932), 147 L. T. 219; 96 J. P. 267; 76 Sol. Jo. 461; 30 L. G. R. 362; 29 Cox, C. C. 499, D. C.

6192a. Statement by probation officer—Otherwise than as witness.]—In a case in which a wife summoned her husband for desertion the justices adjourned the hearing with a view to the probation officer using his good offices to effect a reconciliation. At the resumed hearing he informed the ct., not as a witness, that his efforts had been fruitless, & in the course of his statement expressed a favourable view as to the character of the husband. The justices refused to make an order, & on the wife's appeal it was urged that the justices' minds were biased in favour of the husband by the probation officer's improper & unsolicited testimonial:—Held: the justices were entitled to come to their decision on the evidence. The note of the proceedings contained no reference to any observations by the probation officer & no extraneous evidence should be allowed in the Div. Ct.—PEARCE v. PEARCE (1929), 93 J. 6217b. Necessity for same justices to act throughout.]—At the hearing of a wife's summons for maintenance the justices adjourned the summons for 3 months & made an interim order on the ground of neglect to maintain. Three months later the matter came up before the same ct., but of the four justices two, including the chairman, had not been present at the earlier hearing. The notes of the evidence of the witnesses taken on the previous hearing were read over to the ct. & the form was gone through of swearing the witnesses & then reading their evidence out, but there was no further examination or cross-examination. The justices then "confirmed" the earlier order. The husband appealed:—Held: (1) as the order was based on evidence which had never been heard viva voce by two of the justices, it could not be upheld; (2) if the original hearing terminated in a finding the original order was wrong, as an interim order cannot be made upon a finding, & if the original order was bad, it could not be confirmed at the second hearing; (3) if the original hearing terminated in an adjournment & not in any finding, there was no order which the justices at the second hearing could confirm.—*FULKER v. c i. — Under Maintenance Orders (Facilities for Enforcement) Act, 1923.]—A maintenance order was made against one C. in England in 1908. A copy of the order, which was certified as a true copy by a person described as "clerk to the justices," was registered in N.S.W. in 1929. Proceedings were taken in this State against C. in Aug. 1930, to enforce payment of arrears of maintenance, the greater portion of which was referable to the period prior to registration. A sworn complaint by the original English complainant contained the only evidence of non-compliance prior to the date of registration. Proof of the identity of C. with the person against whom the original order was made consisted in a similarity of names, evidence that C. had been concerned in maintenance proceedings in England, & evidence as to the nature of his occupation & his request as to service of the process. An order was made that C. be imprisoned until the arrears of maintenance had been paid, & against that order a rule nisi for prohibition had been granted:—Held: the sworn complaint was not a deposition within Maintenance Orders (Facilities for Enforcement) Act, 1923, s. 11, & could not be accepted as evidence of non-compliance with the order prior to the date of its registration in N.S.W.—*Re McMASTER, Ex p. An application was subsequently made by her to a ct. of summary jurisdiction in England under the above Act to confirm that order as against her husband who was resident in England. Upon that application no evidence was submitted to the justices on behalf of the husband. The justices confirmed the order with the modification or variation of substituting £2 10s. per week, i.e., £2 for the married woman & 10s. for the child, in lieu of £5 10s. per week, they being of opinion that they were bound to reduce the amount payable under the order to the limit prescribed for such orders made by a ct. of summary jurisdiction under Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39):—Held: (1) the justices had power to state a case for the opinion of the K. B. Div. on the question whether they were right in so deciding; (2) they were wrong in holding that in dealing with an order under the above Act of 1920 they were bound to limit the amount payable to the sum prescribed for orders made under the above Act of 1895.

—]—A provisional order for maintenance of a wife resident in South Africa was made in a magistrate's ct. in South Africa against her husband then domiciled & resident in England. The order came before a Metropolitan magistrate for confirmation, & he made an order confirming it:—Held: (1) as desertion is a continuing offence, there was evidence upon which the South African ct. could find that the wife was deserted in South Africa, although the commencement of the desertion had been elsewhere; (2) it was open to the husband, on the application to confirm, to raise the question of the jurisdiction of the magistrate's ct. in South Africa to make the provisional order, although that ground was not one of those enumerated in the statutory "statement" sent over by the South African ct. of the grounds upon which the application for maintenance might have been opposed by the husband if a party to the proceedings. Therefore, the ct. being satisfied, on consideration of the South African statutes, that the magistrate's ct. had jurisdiction, held that the Metropolitan magistrate's order confirming the provisional order was right.—Re WHEAT, [1932] 2 K. 6242a. Foreign divorce.—In 1935 a maintenance order was made in a ct. of summary jurisdiction in England against M., a German subject. In 1930 a decree of divorce was pronounced between M. & his wife in Germany. Both parties had submitted to the jurisdiction of the ct. & the decree was pronounced on grounds that by insulting behaviour & incompatibility of temper the wife had failed to fulfil her marriage obligations. M. then applied for a revocation of the maintenance order. The justices refused the application for the following reasons: (i) they considered that the fact that the marriage had been dissolved in Germany on grounds which would not be recognised in England was not a sufficient reason for them to discharge the order, & (ii) the wife's financial position had not changed & was such that she required the maintenance payable under the order for her support, & the justices therefore exercised their discretion in her favour. The husband appealed:—Held: (1) the decree of the German ct. was valid & binding throughout the world & the justices were not concerned with the question whether the grounds of divorce were recognised in England; (2) in the case of a foreign divorce where the parties could not make any application to the Divorce Ct. in England the continuance of the award of maintenance is not a judicial exercise of the magistrates' discretion.

The order was for 6s. The husband complained by summons towards the end of 1930 that his wife, now aged 60 years, had committed adultery with a man up to Mar. 1930, & claimed that the order be discharged. The wife's defence was a denial of adultery with the man for whom she had acted as house-keeper till his death in 1929. The justices found that adultery had been committed, & revoked the order on Jan. 5, 1931. The wife appealed on the ground that it was contrary to the weight of evidence:—Held: on the evidence before the justices the wife ought not to have been found guilty of adultery, but apart from that the husband was out of time in applying for the discharge of the order of 1904. The ground of the husband's complaint occurred more than six months before he took proceedings, & therefore the justices had no jurisdiction to hear the summons.—MELLARS v. MELLARS (1931), 145 L. 6250g. ——— Particulars of adultery.]—

A wife had obtained an order under Summary Jurisdiction (Separation & Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1925, that her husband should pay her 30s. a week by way of maintenance. The order did not contain a non-cohabitation clause. Subsequently the husband took out a summons asking that the order for maintenance should be discharged, on the ground that the wife had committed adultery. The husband gave evidence that, since the date of the maintenance order, his wife had given birth to a child, & of non-access on his part. This was the only evidence of adultery. The justices found that the wife had committed adultery, & discharged the weekly order for maintenance:—Held: (1) the evidence of the husband of non-access to bastardise his child was not admissible, & the justices' order discharging the maintenance order must be set aside; (2) in proceedings under Summary Jurisdiction (Separation & Maintenance) Acts, 1895 to 1925, if there is a charge of adultery, the act or acts of adultery should be specified with particulars, if possible, of the place where, the time when, & the name of the person with whom it is alleged the adultery has been committed.—*BOSTON v. 6251b. ——— Undertaking by husband's parents to make allowance—Alteration of status of parties—Cesser of allowance.]—On an application by a husband for a reduction of the amount of a maintenance order pursuant to Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (c. 39), ss. 5 (c), 7, the parents of the husband undertook to pay a lump sum in settlement of arrears under the order & to pay maintenance at a reduced rate. An order was drawn up in these terms, the parents giving their undertaking to the summary jurisdiction ct. On a subsequent application by the husband for further reduction on the grounds of reduced means & that a decree absolute of divorce had been pronounced dissolving the marriage of the husband & wife, the ct. of summary jurisdiction found that there was no reason to justify a further alteration of the order, although it was stated that the parents of the husband had refused to pay. On appeal it was held by the Divisional Ct. that these circumstances did not suffice to justify a reduction. Since Bragg v. Bragg, [1925] P. 20, it is plain that dissolution of marriage does not have the effect of discharging an order for maintenance. If & when in such a case it is decided by a ct. of competent jurisdiction that the undertaking of third parties is not enforceable & that there are no means of compelling them to put the husband in funds to pay the maintenance ordered, it is open to the husband to allege before the ct. of summary jurisdiction that there is fresh evidence entitling him to a reduction of the order, but so long as the undertaking is not shown to be unenforceable its existence is plainly a circumstance that the ct. of summary jurisdiction can take into account in assessing the means of the husband to pay.—*PLUNKETT v. SECT. 1.—APPLICATION OF SCHEDULE (Vol. XXVIII., p. 6).

- 11a. General rule.]—(1) Income tax under Schedule A., as under every other Schedule, is assessed on profits & gains, & the test in regard to liability to tax under Schedule A. is not whether the person taxed had an independent ownership of the property, but whether he had profits & gains in respect of his occupation.

(2) A person who by a will is given a right of residence in a house rent free so long as he wishes, & who is in residence during the year of assessment, is assessable to income tax for that year under Schedule A. in respect of his beneficial occupation; & the amount at which he is assessed must be included in a return of the total income for super tax purposes in the following year.

(3) When the right of residence is given to two persons jointly, it is for the Special Comrs. to fix the proportion of the total assessment applicable to each person, & when such a finding has been made, it should be accepted in any higher ct.—*SHANKS v. To hold, as applt. contended, that the words "having the use of any lands or tenements" in Sched. be disposed of by giving to the words in rule 2 the meaning "entitled to the beneficial use of any lands or tenements." The contention that "occupation" had the same meaning in the Income Tax Acts as in the law of rating was not supported by the dictum of SCRUTTON, L.J., in Back v. Daniels, [1925] 1 K. B. 526, relied on by applt. The difference between the law of rating & the income tax law was that the Statute of Elizabeth contained no definition of "occupier," & therefore occupation had to be treated as a question of fact, whereas in Income Tax Act, r. 2, provided that a certain person should be deemed to be the occupier although he did not occupy the lands in fact. But since the assessment on the lands was in the same amount as when they were occupied with the house, the case must be remitted to the Comrs. for them to ascertain the annual value of the lands apart from the house.—BERTRAM v. WIGHTMAN, [1936] 2 K. B. 521; [1936] 2 All E. R. 487; 105 L. J. K. B. 784; 155 L. T. 412; 52 T. L. R. 570; 80 Sol. Jo. 721; 20 Tax Cas. 411.

16b. Factory.—Process machinery connected to freehold.—Resp. co. owned & occupied the premises at which it carried on the business of soap manufacturers. The premises contained plant & machinery, of which part consisted of process machinery, i.e., plant & machinery used for the purposes of the manufacturing operations & trade processes. The assessments on the co.'s premises for each of the years from 1923–24 to 1930–31 inclusive were based on the 1923 valuation for rating purposes, which took into account the value of all plant & machinery in the factory, including the process machinery. Rating & Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), altered the basis of assessment for rating purposes by excluding therefrom the value of process machinery, & the annual value of the premises for rating purposes was computed accordingly as from 1929. The annual value so computed was adopted as the annual value for purposes of income tax, Sched. A., for the year 1931–32, being a year of re-assessment under Finance Act, 1930 (c. 28), s. 27. On appeal the co. contended (i) that annual value in No. I of Sched. A., had the same meaning as annual value in Parochial Assessments Act, 1836 (c. 96), s. 1, which had been held, in effect, to include process machinery, (ii) that while Rating & Valuation Act, 1925 (c. 90), had altered the meaning of annual value for rating purposes by excluding process machinery, no corresponding alteration had been made in the meaning of annual value under Income Tax Act, 1918, & (iii) that the assessment on its premises should accordingly be increased to include the process machinery. The General Comrs. found that the whole of the process machinery was definitely attached in one way or another to the freehold, & decided that the value thereof must be included in the Sched. A. assessment:—Held: without deciding the point raised in the co.'s contentions, the General Comrs.

had found that the process machinery was so annexed to the freehold or realty as to form part of the hereditament to be valued for Sched. A. purposes & in so finding they had made no error of law.—CRAWFORD v. HUDSON (R. S.), LTD. (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 434.

20a. — Insurance premium.—The lease of premises, of which applt. co. was the lessor, provided that the rent should be (for the year 1936–7) £104 per annum, & that the lessee should pay "a yearly sum by way of further rent equal to the amount of an insurance premium paid by the lessor." The insurance premium amounted to £1 per annum & the annual value of the premises for income tax was assessed at £105 (gross). The Comrs. confirmed the assessment & the co. appealed, contending that the premium did not affect the annual value for purposes of tax, & that the assessment should have been £104 only:—Held: dismissing the appeal, since the lease referred to the premiums as rent, the Comrs. were entitled to take the premiums into account in arriving at the annual value, based on the rack rent within Sched. A, No. 1., Rule 1 (2), & since Sched. A, No. V., Rule 8, deals expressly with the cost of insurance as a ground for claiming repayment of tax, the cost of insurance is also by implication included in the deductions allowed under No. V., Rule 7, & if a landlord is entitled to deduct from the gross annual value a sum in respect of insurance, the gross annual value must include provision for insurance.—*HOUSE & PROPERTY INVESTMENT CO., LTD. v. 25c. —.]—A block of buildings within the Metropolitan area comprising between fifty & sixty self-contained flats was assessed to income tax, Sched. A., for the year 1926–27, by eight assessments, the assessments being made on the basis that each group of flats approached from the street by a separate entrance was assessable in one sum by one assessment under Rule 8 (c), No. VII., Sched. A. A separate valuation had been made for each flat under Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (c. 67), & had been included in the valuation list which came into force on Apr. 6, 1928. The amounts of the “group” assessments were arrived at by adding together the valuation list valuations of the separate flats in the group:—Held: in the Ct. of Appeal, that the assessments were rightly made.—*TOWLE v. 25d. —.]—The owners of a building comprising eight residential flats & rooms for a porter appealed against eight assessments made under Sched. A., in respect of the flats, on the ground that they were entitled to allowances under Sched. A., No. V., r. 7 (1) (b), as amended by Finance Act, 1923 (c. 14), s. 28. The property was within the area to which Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (c. 67), applied, & in the valuation list in force during the tax year in question the gross value of each flat was shown separately, & the assessments complained of were in amounts corresponding to such gross values. All the flats were self-contained & had separate front doors abutting on to a common staircase inside the building, & there was one entrance to the street giving access to the whole building. Each flat was let to a separate tenant at a rent which included the rates & the cost of lighting & cleaning the common staircase & entrance & of providing a porter, with the result that the rents paid by the tenants largely exceeded the gross values contained in the valuation list. During the year of assessment the amount of the total rents payable under the leases was admitted, but the owners refused to give the particulars necessary to arrive at any outgoings, which should by law be deducted in making the assessment. The owners contended (a) that the gross assessments in the valuation list were conclusive for the purpose of income tax under Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (c. 67), during the quinquennial period in question & that the actual outgoings during any specific year forming part of that period were irrelevant; (b) that under r. 7 of Sched. A., No. V., as amended by Finance Act, 1923 (c. 14), s. 28, they were entitled to the appropriate allowances from the gross Sched. A. assessments set out in para. 3 of that rule for the purpose of collection. The Crown contended (a) that under Sched. A., No. VII., r. 8 (c), the whole house was the unit of assessment & assessable in one sum, namely, the total amount of the gross values of the eight flats & the porter's rooms; (b) that, on the figures before the Comrs., the claim to reduction failed, since under Sched. A., No. V., r. 7 (2), as amended by Finance Act, 1923 (c. 14), s. 28, there was no title to the reduction claimed where the amount of the assessment was less than the rent by a sum greater than the authorised reduction which would be allowable if the assessment were on the amount of the rent after deducting from such rent any outgoing which should by law be deducted in making the assessment. The Comrs. were of opinion that the income tax assessments should follow the assessments as fixed under Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (c. 67), & therefrom the appropriate deductions allowed for repairs in the case of each flat, & they reduced the assessments in accordance with para. 3 of r. 7:—Held: (1) it was incompetent to the Crown to raise their first contention, as 1918 Act gave the Crown no right of appeal against an assessment; (2) if the tax-payer was to make good his claim to reduction, inquiry must be made as to outgoings, & the case should be remitted to the comrs. to determine what reduction, if any, should be allowed on the basis that the outgoings referred to in para. 2 of r. 7 were to be ascertained separately as to each flat & as to each year of assessment.—*CONSOLIDATED LONDON PROPERTIES, LTD. v. - 46a. Assessment of tithe rentcharge—What may be deducted.—Appls., who owned the whole of the tithe in Wales, appealed against assessments made on them under Sched. A. for the year 1931–32 in respect of rectorial & vicarial tithe rentcharge issuing out of certain lands in a particular parish in Wales. In computing the amounts of these assessments there was deducted from the value of the tithe, estimated by reference to the net commuted value at Apr. 6, 1930, (i) the rates charged during the year 1929–30, & (ii) costs of collection. Appls. contended that the correct assessment of the tithe rentcharge was the rackrent that a hypothetical tenant would be prepared to pay for it, & that in the computation of this amount the following matters (inter alia) should be taken into account: (a) the payment of rates on the tithe some months before the tithe itself can be collected; (b) the cost of obtaining & maintaining a proper list of tithe-payers, & of insuring the tithe map, apportionment deeds & other documents relating to the tithe; (c) certain head office expenditure incurred by appls. in the administration of the whole of the tithe rentcharges vested in them; (d) provision against concerted action by the tithe-payers & expenses of litigation; & (e) provision of a profit for the tenant. The General Comrs. decided that appls. were not entitled to allowances in respect of any of the matters for which they claimed them:—Held: the General Comrs.' determination was one of fact & they had not made any error in law.—*CHURCH TEMPORALITIES COMRS. - 50b. — Whether gross value in Valuation List conclusive as to rent.—Appls. were the owners of premises within the Metropolitan area with regard to which it was admitted that for the years to which the appeal related, 1924–25 & 1925–26, the actual rentals received exceeded the gross Sched. A assessments by more than the authorised reduction mentioned in 1918 Act, rule 7 (2), No. V, Sched. A. They contended, however, that they were entitled to a repairs allowance under rule 7 (1), because (a) in view of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (c. 67), no alterations merely in value of the hereditaments during the quinquennial period could during that period be taken into consideration for the purposes of rule 7 (2) (the repairs allowance had been granted for earlier years within the same quinquennial period—1921–22 to 1923–24); & (b) the gross value in the Valuation List was for all Income Tax purposes conclusive of the annual value & must be treated as the rent of the premises within rule 7 (2). The General Comrs. dismissed an appeal on these grounds against the assessments for the years 1924–25 & 1925–26. The co. appealed:—Held: appls. were not entitled to the allowance.—METROPOLITAN PROPERTIES CO., LTD. v. DUNHAM (1929), 14 Tax Cas. 740.

sd. Costs of management—Payment in compensation for disturbance & expenses of resisting claim for disturbance.—A claim for compensation for disturbance was made against a landlord by the tenants of a farm whose lease had expired. The tenants having applied for arbn., the landlord, who maintained that the claim was incompetent, brought an action of suspension & interdict against the tenants. After proof had been led in the action, the landlord paid the tenants a sum of £850, in settlement of their claim, & then expenses in the action of interdict. His own expenses in the action amounted to £244. The landlord claimed abatement of income tax in respect of these sums, on the ground that they were costs of management:—Held: the expression "cost of management" in Sched. A., No. V., r. 8, did not include a payment made under a claim for compensation for disturbance, or expenses incurred in resisting such a claim.—INLAND REVENUE v. WILSON'S EXORS., [1934] S. C. 244; 18 Tax Cas. 20.—SCOT.

A house & grounds were bought by the society for use as a convalescent home by its members. The purchase price was paid partly by the society & partly by contributions by its members. The home was maintained by the society & was furnished to accommodate twenty or thirty members. No expense was incurred by a member during his residence at the home, & medical men gave their services to it gratuitously:—Held: the home was a hospital within 1918 Act, Schedule A., No VI., r. 1 (c), & the society was entitled to be allowed the amount of tax charged in respect of the premises of which the home was composed.—*ROYAL ANTE-DILUVIAN ORDER OF BUFFALOES v. 62a. — School carried on by company paying dividends.]—The Girls' Public Day School Trust was incorporated as a co., but its memorandum & articles were framed with the object of establishing schools that would give a good education at the lowest possible cost. The Trust School was open to the general public, a large proportion of its pupils were scholars from the public elementary schools, & a great proportion of its governing body were nominated by the local education authority, & further, the school was largely maintained by public moneys, & in the view of the Board of Education the school satisfied the regulation which prohibited any Parliamentary grant to a school conducted for private profit. In accordance with the Board's wishes it was provided that the co. should be converted into an educational trust at the end of a period & exceeding fifty years from 1905, & that in the event of a winding up before the end of that period the surplus assets of the co. should be subject to an educational trust & should not be distributed among the shareholders; that during the period above-mentioned the dividend paid on share capital should not exceed a sum equal to 4 per cent. a year. The Comrs. found on the facts the Trust School was a public school, & as such entitled to the benefit of the exemption from income tax provided for by 1918 Act, Sched. A., No. VI., r. 1 (c):—Held: there was ample evidence on which the Comrs. could find that this school was a public school, & the possibility of profit arising to an individual in the course of carrying on a school did not of necessity prevent the school having the character of a public school.

The existence of a perpetual foundation is not by itself conclusive, but only one of the factors to be considered. There is no distinction between money used for a public school raised by debentures at interest, & money raised by preference shares with limited interest. The judgments in Blake v. London Corp., No. 60, were not intended to lay down a rule that no school from the conduct of which any person could derive pecuniary benefit could in any circumstances be a public school.—*GIRLS' PUBLIC DAY SCHOOL TRUST v. Its premises comprised a medical library for the use of members, & a hall where monthly meetings were held at which papers on medical subjects were read & discussed. The co. used the land mainly to rear pedigree cockerels, which were sent out to farmers who owned approved stock, & mated on their farms. The eggs produced were bought by the co. & hatched in its incubators & the resulting chicks were mostly sold as day-old pedigree chicks. Some were reared on the land & sold later, & others were used to supply breeding stock for the co.'s operations. In addition, the co. undertook the hatching of eggs for customers, known as "custom hatching." On appeal by the co. against estimated assessments to income tax under Sched. D in respect of the profits of these activities, made on the basis that such profits were not covered by the assessments under Sched. B on the land occupied, the Special Comrs. decided that the whole of the co.'s activities (with the exception of the "custom hatching," the profits of which were properly assessable under Sched. D) fell within the description of husbandry & were assessable under Sched. B on that footing, & they reduced the assessments under appeal accordingly.

(2) In order to obtain hardy birds for its business of breeding & dealing in poultry applt. co. kept on its land a stock of birds possessing the required strain. Eggs produced by this stock were sent by the co. to approved suppliers, who had them hatched by their own hens & reared the progeny; the best cockerels were then mated with the suppliers' hens & the eggs produced were purchased by the co., which hatched them in its incubators & sold a large number of the chicks when a day old. Chicks not so sold were transferred to brooder houses, where they were fed on food acquired from outside sources, & after some eight weeks put out to run on the co.'s land. The chicks so reared were sold at varying ages, or became part of the co.'s breeding stock. Assessments to

77a. — — — — — Silver fox farm.]—Resp. obtained the lease of a dwelling-house & poultry run extending over some 55 acres, the proprietors reserving the right to graze stock, other than poultry on the land & to use the farm buildings thereon. Resp. had no right to crop any portion of the run, but certain ground was placed at his disposal for the growing of garden produce. By a subsequent agreement resp. was granted the exclusive right of tenancy of 14 acres of the land for silver fox breeding. This latter area was divided up into a number of ranches, each containing breeding pens & an open run; during the breeding season the foxes were confined to the pens, but for the remainder of the year they occupied the open runs. The foxes were fed largely on flesh & cereals, not produced on the holding, & on eggs & vegetables, mainly so produced. The silver fox does not pasture on the land, although a certain amount of grass is necessary for its health. Resp. purchased foxes from other ranches, & sold foxes on condition that they remained in his care on terms under which he received a proportion of all litters born on the farm. His profits were derived almost wholly from the sale of live foxes, the selling of pelts representing only a very small part of the turnover. Throughout the material period no assessments were made on resp. under Sched. B. in respect of the lands occupied by him. Resp. was assessed under Sched. D. in respect of profits from the business of silver fox farming. On appeal the General Comrs. found that he fell to be assessed under Sched. B. & not under Sched. D., & that he was not occupying the land for the purpose of husbandry only, or mainly for that purpose. He was accordingly assessable under Sched. B. on one-third of the annual value of the land:—Held: the question at issue was one of fact, there was evidence upon which the Comrs. could arrive at their determination & they had not misdirected themselves in law.—IN-

A permanent stock of about one thousand head of poultry was kept, & in addition forty-six sheep were grazed on the land, & some of the grass was cut for hay:—Held: the land was occupied for the purpose of husbandry, in respect that the fruits of the soil were used to a material extent for the sustenance of the poultry, & the poultry farmer was entitled to be assessed on the profits of the business under Schedule B., & not under Schedule D.—LEAN v. INLAND REVENUE, [1926] S. C. 15; sub nom. LEEN & DICKSON v. BALL, 10 Tax Cas. 341.—SCOT.

income tax under Sched. D were raised on the co. to include the profits derived from the hatching of eggs supplied by other persons & the sale of the chicks, it being admitted that the co.'s other activities on the land were covered by the assessments under Sched. B. On appeal, the General Comrs. decided that the co. was carrying on two separate businesses, one the production of poultry farming, & the other the purchase of eggs & sale of chicks, which was quite independent & properly assessed under Sched. D:—Held: in each case, that the finding of the Comrs. was one of fact & that they had evidence before them on which they might reach their determination.—*LONG v. 77b. — Profits from brood mare.]—

Applt. carried on business in partnership, the partnership's sole asset being a thoroughbred brood mare & her progeny. The mare was kept on a stud farm of which one of the partners was the tenant. A number of other animals was kept on the same farm, & no specific acreage was allotted to the mare & her progeny, nor to any other animals on the farm, which was used indifferently for all animals upon it. No part of the farm was ever assigned in writing to the partnership in connection with its activities. The mare's progeny were, as a rule, sent to yearly sales, but in some cases they were put into training to prove their merit on the race-course with a view to sale:—Held: the profits of the partnership must be divided into two parts, one being those derived from the thoroughbred brood mare as a brood mare, & the other those derived from racing & selling the progeny of the mare. The second class of profits was wholly assessable under Sched. D. The first class of profits was also assessable under Sched. D, but, in so far as they were profits of the partner who was the occupier of the farm, they would be included in his assessment under Sched. B, & to this extent they should be excluded from the assessment under Sched. D in order to avoid double taxation.—DAWSON v. COUNSELL, [1938] 3 All E. R. 5; 159 L. T. 176; 54 T. L. R. 874; 82 Sol. 77d. Market garden—Part of land used for farming.]—Applt., who carried on the business of a market gardener, was the occupier of 350 acres of land, consisting of (a) 80 acres of pasture, on which was grazed a considerable number of live stock, including horses used for work on the land, & cattle, pigs & poultry for breeding, fattening & for sale, (b) 7 acres fallow, & (c) 263 acres under cultivation for growth of vegetables. Of these 263 acres 212 acres were owned by applt. or occupied by him under ordinary tenancy agreements; the remaining 51 acres were hired by him from farmers under special agreements, for rather more than twelve months, by which the lessors agreed to prepare the land & to do all the work necessary to be done by horse labour, applt. providing manure & seed, sowing the seed & digging the crop. It was agreed that applt. was the occupier of these 51 acres, which formed part of larger holdings & were included in the Sched. B. assessments on the lessors in respect of the assessable value of such holdings. The whole acreage occupied by applt. consisted of open fields & was worked as one entire holding by ordinary agricultural labour at ordinary agricultural rates of pay, but the cost per acre of the labour employed far exceeded that employed on ordinary farming. Manuring was much heavier than for ordinary farming; part of the manure used was derived from the stock on the holding. Applt. was assessed under rule 8 of Sched. B. as a market gardener on the profits arising from the whole of the 350 acres occupied by him. He appealed to the General Comrs., contending (inter alia) that the rule was not applicable to his holding which he claimed was an ordinary farm occupied wholly or mainly for the purposes of husbandry & chargeable on the assessable value of the land, & that the liability to tax in respect of the 51 acres occupied under special conditions was exhausted by the Sched. B. assessments on the lessors. The General Comrs. found (a) that the 263 acres were cultivated as a garden, that the land in applt.'s occupation was mainly devoted to market gardening, & that the farming operations carried on by him were ancillary to the market gardening business; (b) that he was accordingly properly assessable under rule 8 of Sched. B. in respect of his profits from the entire holding:—Held: the matters in issue were questions of fact for the determination of the Comrs. & there was evidence upon which the Comrs. could arrive at their conclusions.—DENNIS v. HICK (1935), 19 Tax. Cas. 219.

79a. — Family partnership.]—Resp. was assessed under Sched. B. for the seven years to 1930–31, inclusive, as the occupier of two farms & land purchased by him in 1917, & also for the years 1926–27, 1927–28 & 1928–29 as occupier of land in another parish purchased by his son on Apr. 6, 1926. Resp. appealed to the General Comrs. contending that he was not the occupier of these lands during the years in question, & that the assessments should be made on a partnership consisting of his son & three daughters, all of whom resided with him at one of the farms of which he was the rated occupier throughout, up to Oct. 6, 1927, when one of the daughters left the farm, & thereafter, of the son & the other two daughters. Resp. stated in evidence that in 1920, owing to advancing years, he transferred his interest in the lands then owned by him to his son & three daughters, though there had never been a tenancy agreement & he had not received any rent, at any rate prior to Apr. 1929. The following facts were also found or admitted. There was no change in farming procedure in 1920. The buying & selling of stock was done by resp.'s son, but resp.'s advice was sought & acted upon. A deed of partnership was first drawn up in 1928. The capital for the farm was wholly provided by resp. The farm bank account was in the name of resp., who signed all cheques, until Apr. 1929, when the balance of the account was transferred to a new account in the partnership name, all cheques thereafter being signed by two of the persons mentioned in the deed. No distribution of profits had been made apart from that transfer. Payments of money were made from time to time by applt. to his son & daughters, but a daughter not connected in any way with the farm or the alleged partnership shared in these. When one daughter married & left the farm in Oct. 1927, no statement of affairs was drawn up, nor did she receive any payment. As regards the land purchased by resp.'s son in 1926, there was no tenancy agreement between him & the alleged partnership. The land was let to another farmer from Apr. 6, 1929. The General Comrs. allowed the appeal:—Held: there was no evidence upon which the Comrs. could find that anybody other than resp. was in occupation of the lands purchased by him in 1917, but there was material before them on which they might arrive at their conclusion that he was not the occupier of the land purchased by his son in 1926.—CALDER v. ALANSON (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 293.

79c. — Trustee in bankruptcy—Effect of doctrine of relation back.]—M. conveyed his interest in certain nurseries to resps., who went into possession on Sept. 30, 1931. In 1932 M. was adjudicated bkpt. & the trustee in bkpcy. moved to set aside all dispositions made by M., including the disposition to resps. An order declaring the dispositions to be void against M.'s creditors was duly made & on Oct. 26, 1932, the trustee went into possession of the nurseries. Sufficient assets having been realised to pay off the only creditor, the trustee went out of possession on Mar. 9, 1933, resps. returning into occupation. Resps. contended that, as the title of the trustee in bkpcy. related back under Bkpcy. Act, 1914 (c. 59), s. 37, to the time of the act of bkpcy., on a proper construction of Income Tax Act, 1918, Sched. A. No. VII., r. 2, resps. were not at any time until Mar. 9, 1933, "occupiers" of the nurseries for the purposes of Sched. B.:—Held: resps. were "occupiers" within Sched. A., No. VII., r. 2, & were properly assessed under Sched. B., from Sept. 30, 1931, to Oct. 26, 1932.—JOLY v. PINHOE NURSERIES, LTD., [1936] 1 All E. R. 841; 80 Sol. Jo. 534; 20 Tax Cas. 271.

79d. — Trustees of golf course on common.]—Appls. carried on, under a licence granted by the conservators of a common, a golf course upon part of the common. Appls. had exclusive right to construct & maintain the golf course, to dig gravel & soil, & to cut turf & gorse for the purpose of maintaining the course, & to turn out sheep for the purpose of keeping down the grass & making the turf suitable for playing golf. Any member of the public was entitled to play golf on the course upon payment of 1s. 6d. per round. The profits derived from the carrying on of the course were to be applied either to the improvement of the course for the benefit of the public or to paying an annual sum to the conservators for the upkeep of the common:—Held: appls. were not in occupation of the golf course within Sched. B.—MITCHAM GOLF COURSE TRUSTEES v. EREAUT, [1937] 3 All E. R. 450; 81 Sol. Jo. 612; 21 Tax Cas. 239.

79e. "Dealer in milk"—Land insufficient for keep of cattle—Liability to be assessed under Schedule D.]—Resp. occupied a farm which was charged to tax under Schedule B. on which he kept a number of cows for milking. The soil was of such a poor quality that resp. had to expend considerable sums yearly on feeding stuffs. The produce grown on the land represented only about thirty per cent. of the food required for the cows. Resp. sold his milk to regular customers in the district, & only purchased milk for resale when his own supply was insufficient for his customers' ordinary requirements. He sold his cows when they became dry. The general comrs. held that resp. was not a dealer in milk, & they discharged an assessment made upon him in accordance with 1918 Act, Schedule D., Case III., r. 4:—Held: resp. was a dealer in milk whose land was insufficient for the keep of the cows within the rule, & the further question whether the assessable value afforded no just estimate of the profits was for the comrs. to find, & the case must be remitted to them for that purpose.—HUXHAM v. JOHNSON (1926), 130 L. T. 410; 11 Tax Cas. 266.

79f. "Seller of milk"—Land insufficient for keep of cattle—Liability to be assessed under Schedule D.]—A farmer may be a "seller of milk" within 1918 Act, Schedule D., Case III., r. 4, even though he merely sells, by wholesale, the milk produced on his farm; & it is not necessary that, to come within the rule, he should own some outside trading organisation for the disposal of the milk.—STEPHENSON v. WALLER (1927), 44 T. L. R. 155; 72 Sol. Jo. 102; 13 Tax Cas. 318.

83a. Method of computation—"Gardens for the sale of produce"—What are—Bulb farm.]—Appls., who carried on a business described as "Spalding Bulb Farms," owned 204 acres of land, which was used as to some 60 acres for the cultivation of bulbs, some 50 acres for potatoes, & 94 acres for the more ordinary crops such as wheat, cereals, green crops, beans & mangolds. It was necessary to transplant bulbs to effect their preservation,

83 i. Claim to relief—As joint tenants—What amounts to partnership.]—Resp. & his sons for several years leased & worked a farm jointly, but without any deed of partnership. Resp. had supplied the capital, he conducted all buying & selling & he controlled the bank account, which was in his name. He made no regular payments to his sons, but supplied them, on request, with such moneys as were necessary for their requirements. No record of these disbursements or of the financial results of the working of the farm was kept:—Held: the facts did not justify the inference that a partnership had existed.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. WILLIAMSON (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 335.—SCOT.

83. Arrears—Liability of occupier.]—An occupier of lands, even though he be the owner, is not liable for arrears of income tax under Sched. B. of Income Tax Act, 1918, which should have been levied upon, & ultimately borne by, the former occupier.—DOLAN v. JOYCE & KIRWAN, [1928] I. R. 558.—IR.

which accounted for the surplus acreage over that under bulbs. The land had to be relieved of the burden of constantly growing bulbs. The land was assessed to income tax by the comrs. under r. 8 of Sched. B. of 1918 Act. FINLAY, J., on June 1, 1932, reversed their decision, holding that the case did not come within r. 8 as the land was occupied as a garden, but not as a garden for the sale of produce. For the tax year ending Apr. 5, 1930, the sales produced £8,332 for blooms, £5,415 for bulbs, £1,823 for farm crops, & general labour charges were £5,454. The cost of the labour employed on the bulbs amounted to £27 per acre, a sum far in excess of the cost of labour for ordinary farming, which it was not disputed averaged in the locality £8 per acre. Appls. were bulb growers rather than flower growers, though the blooms were sold. The question was whether appls., the occupiers of the 20½ acres, should be taxed under Sched. B. as occupiers & husbandmen, or whether r. 8 of that Sched. applied to the land. The relevant part of that rule was: "The profits arising from the land occupied as . . . gardens for the sale of produce . . . shall be estimated according to the provisions & rules applicable to Sched. D., but shall be assessed & charged under this Sched. as profits arising from the occupation of lands." Was the land occupied for the purpose of husbandry or as gardens for the sale of produce?—Held: (1) the question whether the land was or was not occupied as a garden was a question of fact for the comrs. to decide, & there was evidence upon which that question might properly be answered in the affirmative; (2) the words "for the sale of the produce" in r. 8 of Sched. B. did not limit the sale to be on or absolutely close to the land that was being used.—MONRO & COBLEY v. BAILEY (1933), 102 L. J. K. B. 471; 148 L. T. 505; 17 Tax Cas. 607, H. L.

85a. Trust including securities issued free from tax—No appropriation—No right to refund.]—

Resp., who was not resident or ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom, was entitled under a will to a life interest in a share of the residue of testator's estate after payment of an annuity to testator's widow, who was resident in the United Kingdom. The residuary estate was fully ascertained & was held by the trustee in investments some of which fell within sect. 46 of 1918 Act, some were ordinary British investments not within sect. 46, & some were foreign & colonial stocks & shares. Income tax had been deducted from all income received by the trustee. The trustee had only one banking account for the trust estate & had not appropriated any of the investments to the payment of the widow's annuity. Resp. preferred claims to repayment of income tax in respect of (a) his share of the trust income derived from British Govt. securities falling within sect. 46 & from foreign & colonial investments, on the ground that he was not ordinarily resident or resident in the United Kingdom; & (b) under sect. 24 of Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), as a British subject not resident in the United Kingdom, the claims being computed on the basis that the widow's annuity was payable in the first instance out of the income from the British investments not falling within sect. 46. Repayment was made by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue on the basis that the annuity should be treated as charged rateably against the whole income. On appeal to the Special Comrs. in connection with the claim under sect. 24 of Finance Act, 1920 (c. 18), it was admitted on behalf of the Comrs. of Inland Revenue that the repayment claimed by resp. would have been allowed, in accordance with the existing practice, if there had been appropriation by the trustee:—Held: as there had not in fact been any appropriation of investments by the trustee to meet the widow's annuity, it must be treated as payable rateably out of the whole income & accordingly the claims as preferred by resp. failed.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. CRAWSHAY (1935), 153 L. T. 457; 79 Sol. Jo. 641; 19 Tax Cas. 715, C. A.

- 91a. Unregistered trade union—Providing holiday camp for members & non-members—Profits from non-members.—Appl't. Assocn., an unregistered trade union, was formed with the object of protecting the interests of employees in local government service & with power (inter alia) to promote the physical & social welfare of its members. In Feb. 1931, the Assocn. purchased an existing holiday camp to provide cheap holiday facilities for its members, their wives, families & friends. For the year 1931, however, bookings were accepted from non-members of the Assocn. who had previously used the camp. The property of the Assocn. belonged by its rules to the members themselves, & the profits of the camp, which were credited to its general funds, enured for the benefit of the members of the Assocn. as a whole & not of the camp users only. An assessment to income tax, Sched. D, was made for the year 1930-31 in respect of the proportion for the period from Feb. to Apr. 5, 1931, of the profits of the camp for the year 1931. On appeal the Assocn. contended that its liability should be confined to the profits made from non-members. The Crown contended that as the users of the camp were not identifiable with the whole membership of the Assocn. or even a part thereof, there was no mutual trading & the whole of the profits was properly assessed to income tax. The General Comrs. decided that the Assocn. was trading with its members as well as with the general public & was liable on the whole of the profits so derived:—Held: the Assocn.'s liability was confined to the profits made from non-members.—NATIONAL ASSOCN. the shares so credited should be accepted in satisfaction of the bonus. In the books of the co. each shareholder was credited with his proportion of the bonus in payment of 10s. in respect of each of the shares so allotted & issued to him:—Held: the proportion of the bonus so credited to each shareholder was "profits or bonus credited" to him within Income Tax Assessment Act, 1915-1921, s. 14 (b), & was properly included in his income.—JAMES v. - 93a. Exchange transaction.]—Under an agreement made on Mar. 8, 1921, for the supply of marble by a co. to building contractors, the contractors agreed to advance £20,000 of the price, percentage deductions being made from the amount due on each consignment of marble until the advance had been repaid. On Mar. 17, 1921, the £20,000 was paid to the co., & in anticipation of the marble being purchased in Italy, though not till the autumn of 1921, the co. at once arranged for the conversion of the greater part of the £20,000 into lire at one hundred & three to the £, & a lira account was opened. In May, 1921, the lira had appreciated in value, & as the money was not yet required by the co., their nominee, without the co.'s knowledge or authority, directed the sale of the balance of the lira account, & at seventy-two to the £ the lire realised a profit of £6,707, which was received by the co. The lire were subsequently repurchased for the purposes of the contract for £19,386, which was allowed as a deduction from the co.'s profits for income tax purposes:—Held: in computing the co.'s profits for the purposes of assessment to income tax for the year 1922-23 the £6,707 was not a profit arising out of the contract for the supply of marble, but was merely an appreciation of a temporary investment, & was not assessable to income tax as part of the profits of the co.'s trade.—MCKINLAY v. The solr. procured the loan, from a client of his firm, of part of the sum required, on a first mtge. of the property, & himself lent the balance on a second mtge. The property was subsequently resold at a profit which entitled the solr. to £500. On another occasion the solr. had agreed with the same builders to provide the whole of the money required to purchase another property, & it was agreed that the solr. should receive £300 regardless of the price on resale. The sums of £500 & £300 were received & retained by the solr. for his sole use & formed no part of the profits of his firm. The solr. took no part in the development of the property or in its sale:—Held: the sums of £500 & £300 were annual profits, & were liable to income tax.—WILSON v. MANNOCH, [1937] 3 All E. - 95b. ———.]—During the years 1917 & 1918 applt. bank paid £7,505,000 for National War Bonds which, under the terms of the prospectus, they were entitled to convert into 5 per cent. War Loan 1929/47. On Apr. 21, 1922, the Treasury made an offer to the holders of National War Bonds entitling them to surrender their holdings in exchange for £134 3½ per cent. Conversion Loan for each £100 5 per cent. National War Bonds. In response to that offer the bank surrendered holdings of bonds to the value of £6,205,000, & subsequently, in exercise of their rights under the terms of the original issue, exchanged their remaining holdings into the 5 per cent. War Loan. If these transactions were equivalent to the realisation of the original holdings the profit would amount to £141,750, & the Inland Revenue authorities brought that sum into account in determining the profits of the bank's trade for purposes of income tax under Case I. of Sched. D. On the question whether there was a mere accretion of capital & in fact no realisation of profit:—Held: there had been a realisation for, as soon as the new securities were taken in place of the investment in the original War Bonds, a new venture was begun in relation to the new holding, & the fact that this transformation took place by the process of exchange did not avoid the conclusion that there had been a realisation of the security.—*WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD. v. fused to take licences, unless they were also given an option of purchase exercisable within a given period, & the syndicate entered into a contract with an American co. to grant them a licence to use & work the syndicate's American patents, with an option of purchase thereof. The co. having exercised its option of purchase, & paid to the syndicate a sum for the purchase of the American patents out & out, the Special Comrs. decided that profits on the sale of the patents arose in the course of the co.'s business & were chargeable to income tax:—Held: the Special Comrs. had not wrongly directed themselves, & there was ample evidence to support their conclusion of fact.—*DUCKER v. - 97b. Payments for grant of shop rights of patented invention.—Applt. was managing director of a co. engaged in the dyeing industry, & also carried on the business of selling yarn & machinery on his own account. He had invented new apparatus for dyeing which was patented in the United Kingdom & America. He exploited this invention by providing & selling the necessary machinery to firms in America, & he did not dispute that he was assessable to income tax, under Case I. of Sched. D., on the profits made on the machinery. Under the agreements made with these firms, however, in addition to the price paid for the machinery, he was entitled to further payments for grant of "shop rights," i.e. the right of the purchasers to use the machinery & processes in their own mills or within a limited area. Applt. contended that these payments were for the acquisition of an exclusive licence to use the patented processes in a limited area, that they were payment for portions of the patent rights & therefore capital payments in respect of which he was not assessable. The Special Comrs. found that the agreements were primarily for the sale of machinery & that the grant to the purchasers of "shop rights" was consequential on the sale; & therefore that the payments for the "shop rights" must be included with the payments for the machinery in the receipts of applt.'s business:—Held: the Comrs. had decided rightly on the evidence before them.—BRANDWOOD v. BANKER, BRANDWOOD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 44.

97c. Ex gratia payment for surrender of quasi-monopoly.—Resp. had great knowledge of & was a leader in the construction of aeroplanes. In 1909 a limited co. was registered to take over resp.'s business. The subject of an award of the Royal Commission for making awards to inventors was the design of a large bomb-carrying aeroplane. In 1917 the Govt. required such machines, & the co., at its request, in order to increase the output of these machines, imparted their special knowledge of their construction to other Govt. contractors, handing over to them all the necessary drawings, etc., & supplying them with trained staffs of engineers. One of the duties of the Royal Commission was (head 3) to ascertain a sum of money where it thought it appropriate that a sum should be given by the Treasury to the claimant. Any sum so given was an ex gratia payment. Under head 3 a sum of £30,483 was recommended to be & was paid to resp., the amount being arrived at as the compensation for his collaboration & assistance rendered to the common pool of knowledge out of which the aeroplanes used ultimately emerged:—Held: the sum of £30,483 was only received by resp. when it was paid to him by the co. in discharge of its contractual obligation to him.—BUTTERWORTH v. PAGE (1935), 153 L. T.

98 i. 99 i. Stud fees.—Applt. was a farmer & breeder of horses, & occupied three farms, in respect of which he was assessed to income tax under Schedule B. He was also the owner of a number of stallions which he used for the service of his own mares, & in addition he sold for fees their services to the mares of other owners, the stallions travelling "rounds" for this purpose in the care of his own servants. He appealed against assessments to income tax made upon him under Schedule D. In respect of stallion fees, & the comrs. decided that in regard to stallion fees the expenses required to make the profits from service to mares, plus any expenses of keeping up the stud to the number of stallions earning fees should be allowed, but the number of horses to be used for replacement should not exceed one-third of those earning fees:—Held: applt. was assessable to income tax under Schedule D. in respect of profits from stallion fees, in accordance with the principle laid down by the comrs.—MARSHALL v. TWEEDY, [1927] S. C. 243; 11 Tax Cas. 524.—SCOT.

sa. —. —.—A wine merchant, who owned a large quantity of rye whisky, invited two friends to assist him in exporting it to the United States for sale there. The latter agreed to contribute towards the cost of exporting the whisky, but took no share in the actual arrangements. It was agreed that the three parties should share the profits of the transaction. They knew that the import of whisky into the United States was against the laws of that country, & that it necessarily involved the making of untrue customs declarations in this country. The parties appealed against an assessment to income tax made upon them jointly under Sched. D. in respect of the profits of the transaction:—Held: (1) the question whether the transaction was undertaken in partnership was a question of fact, on which there was evidence to support the finding of the Comrs. that there was such a partnership; (2) the disposal of the whisky was an adventure "in the nature of trade"; (3) the fact that the adventure involved a contravention of the law did not preclude assessability to income tax in respect of the profits.—LINDSAY v. Appl. became liable for the payment of excess profits duty in respect of the profits of his business in 1918 & 1919. By agreement with the Revenue authorities the greater part of that duty was not paid when due, but was allowed to stand over as an amount due to the Revenue. In 1920, however, applt.'s business suffered a big loss & there was a large deficiency in duty. By agreement in Jan. 1923, after setting off the sums due to the Revenue from applt. for excess profits duty for 1918 & 1919 & those due to be repaid by the Revenue to applt. in respect of his losses in 1920, a small balance was due to applt. & was repaid to him in Jan. 1923. Appl. was assessed to income tax for 1923 on the amount of the excess profits duty so set off, the contention of the Revenue being that in effect the excess profits duty for 1918 & 1919 had been repaid to applt.:—Held: the mutual agreement to set off one claim against the other amounted to a payment by applt. within Finance Act, 1921 (c. 32), s. 36, & a repayment by the Revenue, & the amount of such repayment was a subject-matter of income tax for 1923.—*TARRANT v. 99h. —.—In the course of his business as an amusement caterer, to the conduct of part of which no objection could be taken on the grounds of illegality, applt. provided licensed victuallers & others with automatic machines for use for unlawful gaming:—Held: (1) although the profits derived from these transactions were the profits of an illegal from a vendor syndicate. The co. began development work on one of the properties, opening up some of the claims & sinking a shaft, but on encountering a strong flow of water stopped the work on the ground that it did not want to expend money on a pumping plant, in view of the more important work of purchasing all properties upon which the reef discovered by the co.'s technical advisor was found by him to exist. The co. thereupon purchased certain further properties, thereby exhausting its cash resources. Thereafter one of the co.'s directors stated that the occurrence of platinum in the properties required a large working capital, & suggested that a new powerful co. should be formed to take over the rights held by resp. co. The board of resp. co. approved of this & an agreement was arrived at whereby in effect resp. co. sold its properties to the new co., resp. co. having been assessed to pay income tax on the profits arising out of the sale:—Held: the profits resulting from the sale to the new co. were obtained in an operation of business in a scheme for profit making & were therefore income & not accruals of a capital nature.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. st. Profits of storage of whisky by distillery company.—A distillery co. owned bonded warehouses, in which, on certain conditions, it undertook to store its customers' whisky, after purchase, for three years, or for a longer period, as required. The conditions were (inter alia) that, in return for storage, customers should pay to the co. a sum calculated by taking a fixed rentcharge per cask of whisky for each week of storage, less a deduction for any deficiency due to leakage. The deduction for deficiencies could not be ascertained until the casks were removed at the conclusion of storage, & until then, no sum was demandable from customers. The Revenue maintained that, in estimating the co.'s profits & gains for purposes of income tax, the weekly rent charges fell to be treated as profits accruing week by week, & subject to an allowance being made for the deficiencies as ultimately ascertained, should be brought into account as profits of the year in which they accrued:—Held: the profits from storage contracts were neither earned nor ascertainable until those contracts had been completed, & ought not, therefore, to enter into the computation of the co.'s profits & gains for the purpose of income tax in any year before that in which the contracts were completed.—DAILUAINE-TALISKER DISTILLERIES v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1930] S. C. 878; 15 Tax Cas. 613.—SCOT.

sk. —.—A distillery co. owned bonded warehouses in which it undertook storage of immature whisky belonging to customers. The conditions were that customers should pay a sum calculated by taking a fixed rentcharge per cask for each week of storage, less a deduction for any deficiency due to leakage. The net charges for storage were not ascertainable until the end of the particular storage period, which normally lasted several years, & were not demandable till then. The conditions of storage were, in all material respects, identical with those considered in Dailuaine-Talisker Distilleries v. Inland Revenue, [1930] S. C. 878, & in accordance with that decision, the profits derivable from storage contracts were not included in the computation of the co.'s profits until the year in which each contract was completed & the charges paid. During the currency of certain of its storage contracts, the co. sold its business to another co., & went into voluntary liquidation. The purchasers took over the co.'s warehouses, & the liquidator never had any concern in their management. He, however, informed the various customers having whisky stored there that the purchasing co. had agreed to continue storing their whisky on the same terms as hitherto, & called upon them to pay to him the storage charges accrued to the date of liquidation. By this means, he collected a sum of over £9,000 on account of storage charges, which he handed over to the purchasing co., who had purchased all the shares of the selling co. That sum was not included as a revenue receipt in the purchaser's account, or in the computation of their profits for assessment to income tax:—Held: the sum collected by the liquidator fell to be treated as income of the selling co. for purposes of tax, in respect that it represented profits accruing before the date of liquidation.—INLAND REVENUE v. OBAN DISTILLERY CO. LIQUIDATOR, [1933] S. C. 44; 18 Tax Cas. 33.—SCOT.

99l. Royalties.]—Appl. co. carried on business in the United Kingdom as literary agents, acting on behalf of authors in making arrangements with publishers & others for the publication or disposal of authors' literary productions. The co. remitted to the authors the royalties less the co.'s commission & expenses. The co. was assessed for the year 1925–26 in respect of sums paid under such arrangements to certain authors who were not resident in the United Kingdom. The books concerned were written out of the United Kingdom. The co. appealed to the Special Comrs. The Comrs., in an interim decision, determined that the copyright royalties in question were not profits or gains arising from any trade, profession, or vocation exercised in the United Kingdom; that they were profits or gains arising from property in the United Kingdom; & that the non-resident authors were assessable in the name of the co. under rule 5 of the General Rules. At a further hearing the Comrs. held that the assessments should be under Case VI. of Sched. D, & they should be in the amount of the royalties less the agents' commission & incidental expenses, so far as they related to the royalties brought into charge, & not, as contended on behalf of the revenue, without any such deduction. Both parties appealed:—Held: that the royalties were annual profits or gains arising from property in the United Kingdom & so were assessable under Sched. D; & that allowance should be made in the assessments for the expenses indicated.—CURTIS BROWN, LTD. v. JARVIS; JARVIS v. CURTIS BROWN, LTD. (1929), 14 Tax Cas. 744; 73 Sol. Jo. 819.

They bought Treasury Bonds cum coupon & at the same time sold bonds of the same nominal value ex coupon. By cashing the coupons detached they received interest on the bonds less income tax deducted under Sched. C:—Held: the net interest received by the co. having been taxed under Sched. C. could not again be brought into account for the purpose of the assessment of income tax under Sched. D. in respect of the profits or gains of the co.'s business.—*THOMPSON v. TRUST & LOAN CO. ship secondhand, which required extensive repairs. The vessel was immediately put into the hands of shipbuilders to carry out the repairs, but they failed to complete the repairs until five months after the expiry of the period specified in their tender. The owners having claimed as damages a sum based on the estimated profits which the ship would have earned during the five months, the claim was ultimately compromised by a payment of £3,000:—Held: this sum constituted profits on which the owners were liable to income tax, in respect that it was compensation for the loss of trading profits, not for injury to a capital asset.—*BURMAH STEAMSHIP CO. v. se. Royalty.]—Resp., the owner of certain freehold land in Alberta, entered into an agreement with an oil co. under which she sold a part of her land to the co., & in consideration of the sale the co. agreed to pay her $5,000 in cash, to issue to her 25,000 fully-paid shares of $1 each in the co., & further, to deliver to her order "the royalty reserved . . . namely, 10 per cent. of all the petroleum, natural gas & oil produced & saved from the said lands free of costs." In 1927 the co. paid to resp. $9,570.41 in respect of the 10 per cent. royalty, & she was assessed to income tax on that sum on the ground that it came within the words "annual profit or gain from any other source" in Canadian Income War Tax Act, 1927, s. 3 (1):—Held: the royalty received was not a "profit or gain" but was of a capital nature (a part of the purchase price of the land) & was not assessable to income tax under 1927 Act.—*MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE v. sl. Sale of land.]—Land had been purchased by or on behalf of three individuals (who, with their solr., were the co.'s only shareholders) who paid the purchase price. The land was transferred to the co. (which made no payment therefor), one lot by a conveyance (direct from the original vendor) in Feb. 1928, & the other lot by a conveyance in May, 1928. The land (upon which were rented buildings) was managed by one of the individuals, the same as if the co. did not exist. In 1929 the said three individuals entered into an agreement to sell the land to a purchaser at a profit (the profit in question), which agreement was registered on Feb. 5, 1929. On the face of the agreement, it was a sale by the three individuals; the money was payable to them, & the proceeds of the sale were paid to them. In June, 1928, the co. had executed a conveyance of the land to the three individuals, for a nominal consideration, which conveyance was not registered until Feb. 5, 1929, a few minutes after the registration of said agreement of sale:—Held: the sale on which said profit was made was not a sale by the co. or on its behalf, the profit was not a profit of the co., & it was not liable for income tax thereon.—*DONALD (M.D.), LTD. v. 99n. Remission of debt.—In 1919 applt. co. entered into a contract with an oil-producing co. for the purchase of petroleum for a minimum period of twenty years. Applt. co. was adversely affected by the slump in the petroleum business in 1921 & was unable to meet its liability under the contract for oil supplied, etc. Accounts of applt. co.'s business were made up for the year ended June 30, 1921, & for the eighteen months ended Dec. 31, 1922. At June 30, 1921, the agreed amount owing to the oil-producing co. under the contract was £1,073,281; at Sept. 30, 1921, the amount was £1,270,232. Under the terms of an agreement dated Nov. 25, 1921, applt. co. paid to the producing co. the sum of £325,000 & was released by the producing co. from its liability to pay the balance remaining due, viz., £945,232. The amount so released was carried direct to applt. co.'s balance sheet & was shown as a separate item under the head "Reserve" at Dec. 31, 1922. The Crown contended that the amount released should be brought into account in computing applt. co.'s profits for purposes of income tax & Corporation Profits Tax, either in the account for the eighteen months to Dec. 31, 1922, or, alternatively, in the account for the year to June 30, 1921, that account being re-opened for the purpose. The Special Comrs. held that the amount released should be brought into the profit & loss account of the co. for the eighteen months to Dec. 31, 1922:—Held: the amount remitted should not be included as a receipt in the account for the eighteen months to Dec. 31, 1922, & the account for the year to June 30, 1921, should not be re-opened & adjusted by reference to the remission.—*BRITISH MEXICAN PETROLEUM CO., LTD. v. sa. Payment to shareholder by company not in liquidation.—Applt. was a shareholder in Hy-Grade Coal Co. of Drumheller, Ltd., from its incorporation in 1919 until its voluntary liquidation in 1933. The co. was engaged in coal mining. In May, 1932, the co. distributed the sum of $12,000 to its shareholders, of which amount applt. received $5,028. Applt. was assessed income tax on this amount, which assessment was affirmed by the Minister of National Revenue, & from that decision applt. appealed:—Held: (1) a corp. not in liquidation can make no payment to its shareholders by way of return of capital except as a step in an authorised reduction of capital & that any other payment made to its shareholders can only be made by way of dividing profits; (2) until a reserve fund is effectively capitalised it retains the characteristics of distributable profits; (3) the payment of $12,000 by the co. in 1932, while still a going concern, must be treated as a distribution of a dividend & not a return of capital, & applt.'s share of such distribution was taxable as income.—*McCONKEY v. 99p. Cumulative dividend of English company guaranteed by foreign company—English company without funds—Dividend authorised by foreign company.—By two deeds executed in 1920 an American co. guaranteed the payment by an associated English co. of the dividend on its preference shares at the rate of 6 per cent. The English co. later raised the rate of dividend to 7½ per cent. & without any further deed the American co. assumed liability for the additional dividend. The English co. in one year having no funds for such payment, the following procedure was followed: the American co. authorised the English co. to make the payment, & the latter co. issued dividend warrants for the amount of the dividend less tax. The English co. then debited the American co. with the gross amount of the dividend:—Held: the effect of the transaction was a payment of the gross amount by the American co. & not of the net amount; the payments when received by the shareholders were income in their hands & liable to tax; the co. was rightly charged under All Sched. Rules, r. 21.—ÆOLIAN CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. ÆOLIAN CO., LTD., [1936] 2 All E. R. 219; 80 Sol. Jo. 736; 20 Tax Cas. 547.

99q. Sale by liquidator.—Applt. co. was formed in 1933 with a capital of £2,500 & was formed sd. Stock dividends—What amount to.—Deft. co. was incorporated under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, with an authorised capital of $250,000 divided into 25,000 shares of the par value of $10 each. By-law of the co., enacted on Dec. 11, 1933, provided that: "For the amount of any dividend which the directors may lawfully declare payable in money they may issue shares of this co. as fully paid." On Dec. 11, 1935, the directors of the co. declared a dividend "on the issued share capital of this co. in the form of an issue of whole shares of this co.'s capital stock of such aggregate par value as shall be, as nearly as may be, equal in total amount to the surplus of this co. on Dec. 31, 1935, less the amount of a fair reserve for any taxes. . . . The surplus was determined at $49,571.51, & the co. allotted & issued 4,957 shares of its capital stock to its shareholders of record at the close of business on Dec. 31, 1935, pro rata according to their holdings of issued shares of the co. as of that date, & these shares were paid up in full by the transfer from the "earned surplus" account of the co. of the sum of $49,570 to the credit of the share capital account. This surplus thus capitalised was available prior to its capitalisation for the payment of cash dividends to the shareholders of deft. Deft. did not collect or withhold or pay the tax in respect to 4,907 of these shares allotted & for & did in fact purchase the foreign right in a patent for £2,500 payable in the shares of the co. Subsequently all the holders of the shares agreed to sell those rights to two gentlemen for £50,000. This agreement was the subject of litigation, & in settlement thereof the following agreement was made. It was agreed that the previous agreement should be annulled & that the co. should go into voluntary liquidation & the liquidator should sell the Belgian, French & Italian rights in the patent to the purchasers for £20,000. This agreement was implemented & the £20,000 purchase money was distributed among the shareholders according to their respective shareholdings & treated as part of the distribution of the assets of the co. in the liquidation. The revenue authorities claimed that such sale of rights for £20,000 was a trading transaction, the profit of which was assessable to income tax.—Held: the realisation of the asset in question by the liquidator was not done in the course of carrying on the trade of the co., but merely in the performance of the liquidator's duty of realising the assets of the co. & bringing it to an end. The profit upon the transaction was therefore not a trading profit & not assessable to income tax.—WILSON BOX (FOREIGN RIGHTS), LTD. (IN LIQUIDATION) v. BRICE, [1936] 3 All E. R. 728; 156 L. 99r. Unclaimed balances.—A firm of auctioneers by their conditions of sale provided that vendors should receive the purchase money on the Monday week following the sale, & that no money would be paid or remittance sent by post without a written order. As a result of the operation of these conditions, large sums of money from time to time remained unclaimed in the hands of the firm. Upon the admission of a partner in 1922, £13,022 6s. 4d. in respect of unclaimed balances for years prior to 1908 was transferred to the capital account of the old partner; & in 1935, upon the admission of a further partner, £10,406 10s. 1d. in respect of unclaimed balances between 1922 & 1928 was transferred partly to the current accounts & partly to the capital accounts of the former partners. A partnership deed in 1936 provided that such liability as subsisted in respect of these sums should be assumed by the partnership, that such unclaimed balances as first arose six years before the taking of each annual account should be transferred at such account to the credit of the partners in accordance with their shares in the partnership, that all liability in respect thereof should be borne by the partnership, but that the liability of the partnership should not appear in the annual general accounts:—Held: the unclaimed balances so received had not by the terms of the partnership deed of 1936 & the preparation of accounts in accordance therewith become trading receipts. These sums remained the money of the firm's clients & were not assessable to income tax.—MORLEY v. TATTERSALL, [1938] 3 All E. R. 296; 159 L. T. 197; 54 T. L. R. 923; 82 Sol. Jo. 453, C. A.

p 1. — To public institution.—The corpn. of C. supplied water (a) for public sanitary purposes within the borough; (b) to private consumers for trade purposes within the borough; (c) to private consumers for domestic purposes within the borough; (d) to certain public institutions situated within the borough for domestic purposes; & (e) to private consumers for domestic purposes outside the borough. The corpn. had authority to levy a water rate on all lands & hereditaments within the borough in respect of the supply of water for domestic purposes, but the corpn. did not in fact levy a separate water rate. If the receipts from the supply of water for trade purposes in any year were not sufficient to meet the full total expenditure on the waterworks in that year (including repayment of loans & interest) the deficit arising was made good out of the general sanitary rate. The general sanitary rate was levied on all tenements within the borough of C. included in the poor law valuation lists, & on all lands to the extent of one-fourth of the sanitary rate. Certain public institutions in C. were not included in the poor law valuation lists, & were, therefore, not subject to the sanitary rate. The water supplied to these institutions by the corpn. was used for purely domestic purposes, & the price to be paid by the institutions for the water supplied was fixed by agreement with the corpn.:—Held: the moneys received by the corpn. for the supply of water to the above-mentioned public institutions should be regarded as trading receipts for the purpose of assessment to income tax.—*KIRBY v. q 1. — Increase in price to meet deficit in electricity undertaking.—A town council incurred a deficit on the working of its electricity undertaking. The council was also the local authority carrying on the manufacture & distribution of gas within the area, & in order to meet the deficit on its electricity undertaking, it increased the price of gas by an amount estimated to yield an additional revenue of £5,000 a year surplus to the estimated requirements of the gas undertaking. Sums of £5,000 were thereafter annually debited in the accounts of the gas undertaking & credited in those of the electricity undertaking:—Held: these sums of £5,000 were properly included in the profits of the gas undertaking for income tax purposes, irrespective of the purpose to which they were applied.—ALLOA MAGISTRATES v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1931] S. C. 656; 16 Tax Cas. 451.—SCOT.

Its members were appointed or elected by local authorities, Govt. departments, railway cos. & ship-owners. It possessed wide powers to dredge, light, buoy & otherwise improve the navigation of the river, & it was empowered to levy dues on vessels entering the river or firth. These dues constituted its sole revenue, & were directed by statute to be applied to the purposes of the undertaking as the Board might determine:—Held: the board was assessable to income tax on the surplus revenue arising from these dues under Case VI. of Sched. 114a. "Turning over" cotton mills.—During the boom in the Lancashire cotton trade in 1919, applt., with other persons, engaged in the operation known locally as "turning over" a cotton mill, i.e. acquiring a controlling interest in the mill, organising its administration & finances, & reselling it to a new co. The operation was successful & applt. joined other syndicates, composed partly of the same persons engaged in "turning over" three other mills. In each case a profit resulted to applt. On Mar. 24, 1923, the additional comrs. for the division in which applt. resided signed the book containing an estimated assessment upon applt. to income tax under Schedule D. for the year 1919–20. The book was not delivered to the general comrs. until Apr. 18, 1923; notice was given to applt. on May 5, 1923, & the assessment was signed by the general comrs. on Sept. 5, 1923:—Held: (1) though each adventure of "turning over" a mill, taken singly, was not a trade, but a capital transaction, yet the succession of such adventures, in each of which applt. took part, might constitute the carrying on of a trade, & the Special Comrs., on an appeal against the assessment, were not estopped by their previous decisions from reconsidering the whole of the facts, & finding that applt. was carrying on a trade, on the profits of which he was liable to income tax; (2) the assessment was made in time, having been made when it was signed by the additional comrs. within the three years allowed by 1918 Act, s. 125 (2), & the subsequent steps need not be within that time.—PICKFORD v. QUIRKE, PICKFORD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1927), 138 L. T. 500; 44 T. L. R. 15; 13 Tax Cas. 251, O. A.

114b. ——— Isolated transaction—Assignment of option.—Resp. joined with three other persons in obtaining an option to purchase a rubber estate in the Malay Peninsula. As the estate was too small for resale to a co. for public flotation, they acquired a further option to purchase an adjoining estate. Ultimately the two estates were sold to a co. at a profit. Resp. having been assessed to income tax on a sum representing his net share of the profit appealed. The Comrs. found that resp. acquired the property or interest in the property with the sole object of turning it over again at a profit, & that he at no time had any intention of holding the property or interest as an investment, & confirmed the assessment. They subsequently found, on the case being referred back to them, that the transaction was not a concern in the nature of trade:—Held: having regard to the finding of the Comrs. that the transaction was not a concern in the nature of trade, & to its being an isolated transaction of purchase & resale of property, the profits arising therefrom were not in the nature of income but were an accretion to capital, & were therefore not subject to tax under 1918 Act, Sched. D, Case VI.—JONES v. LEEMING, [1930] A. C. 415; 99 L. J. K. B. 318; 143 L. T. 50; 46 T. L. R. 296; 74 Sol. Jo. 247; sub nom. LEEMING v. JONES, 15 Tax Cas. 333, H. L.

114c. Subscription to venture subsequently transformed into shares.—A co. amongst its other activities prospected for, acquired options over, purchased & resold to development cos. mineral properties in various parts of the world. Certain persons who were not shareholders in the co. were invited to participate in these ventures, the co. & the participants each subscribing a certain sum of money, & the money being used for the expenses of prospecting the particular property concerned & acquiring an option over it. If the prospecting was satisfactory the option was exercised & a development co. formed, in which the co. & the participants were allotted shares. The participants did not in fact sell these shares. Certain participants were assessed upon the difference between the amount of their subscription to the venture & the nominal value of the shares allotted to them:—Held: the profit on the subscription to the venture was a profit of a capital nature & was not liable to tax. Where there is an investment of money there must be a possibility of the profit upon that money recurring for it to be a revenue profit.—LOWRY v. FIELD, LOWRY v. WILLIAMS, TITCOMB v. CLANCY, DE BURGH WHYTE v. CLANCY, [1936] 2 All E. R. 735; 20 Tax Cas. 679.

115a. Sale of "round" to traveller—Profits retained in reduction of purchase-price.—Prior to 1921 resp. carried on a business as a credit draper on a system by which travellers in his employment called on householders in defined working-class areas, or "rounds," offering articles of clothing for sale on credit, the price of goods sold being collected in instalments by the travellers. In 1919 he agreed to sell to one of his travellers the rounds which the traveller had been working, on the terms that the traveller was to continue in the service of resp. for a specified period, & thereafter to purchase the rounds at a figure calculated by reference to the amount of the then outstanding book debts. The arrangement was that, after the expiration of the service period, the traveller, out of his weekly collections, should retain for himself a certain cash allowance, should pay for goods purchased by him from resp. for disposal on the round, & should hand over to resp. the balance in reduction of the purchase-price. The agreement further provided that the book debts & all future debts contracted until the purchase-money should have been paid should be the absolute property of the resp. & that, if the traveller failed to observe his part of the agreement or neglected the business, resp. should be at liberty to resell the book debts & recover from him any deficiency. Agreements on similar or substantially similar terms were made by resp. with the same traveller in respect of other rounds & also with other travellers. After completion of the agreements all sales by the travellers concerned continued to be made in resp.'s name & the accounts of the customers were as between the customers & resp. At the time material to the appeal the full purchase-price under the agreements had in no case been paid. Resp. was assessed to income tax under Sched. D. for the year 1925–26 to include the profits made on the sale of goods by travellers in his name on the rounds which were the subject of the agreements. On appeal he contended that these profits belonged to the travellers to whom the rounds had been sold, his right of retention of the book debts being merely a form of security for payment of the purchase-price of the rounds. The General Comrs. allowed the appeal:—Held: the effect of the agreements was that, while there was a contract to sell, the transfer of the rounds to the travellers concerned was postponed until the purchase-price had been paid in full, & that until then the profits of the rounds belonged to resp., who was assessable in respect thereof.—BONNER v. FROOD (1934), 18 Tax Cas. 488.

115b. Sale of timber by farmer.—Resp., who occupied two farms which he had owned for fifteen & eight years respectively, elected under rule 5 of Sched. B. to be assessed for a particular year under Sched. D., & submitted accounts in which was included the sum of £243, representing the proceeds of the sale of timber growing on those farms which he had cut & sold. On appeal against Sched. D. assessment resp. put forward various contentions as to the basis of the computation of the amount of the profits, if profits there were, from the sale of the timber. The General Comrs. decided that the profit from the sales of timber was £218, but that, having regard to the definition of "land" in Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 205 (1) (ix), the sale of timber came under the same legal definition as the sale of land & consequently the same incident of taxation applied & there was no liability for income tax in respect of the proceeds of sale of timber:—Held: the profit from the sales of timber arose out of the occupation of the farm lands & must be included in the profits of the resp. as a farmer for the purposes of assessment to income tax under Sched. D.—ELMES v. TREMBATH (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 72.

116a. Professional golfer.]—Resp.*, a professional golfer, had, in addition to his other activities, for a number of years habitually engaged in private games of golf for bets of varying amounts. Resp. was assessed, under Sched. D., to include (inter alia) the balance of gains over losses arising out of the bets made on such games, on the ground that the winnings made could not accurately be called mere betting receipts, but were profits arising out of his vocation as a professional golfer:—Held: resp.'s winnings did not arise from his employment or vocation, & they were not analogous to gratuities for services rendered, nor was there any organisation to support the view that resp. was carrying on a business of betting. The assessment ought, therefore, to be discharged.—Down v. Compston, [1937] 2 All E. R. 475; 157 L. T. 549; 53 T. L. R. 545; 81 Sol. Jo. 358; 21 Tax Cas. 60.

116b. Profits from ownership of land—Whether Schedule A. assessment conclusive—Company letting out offices—Rents & profits from contracts for services.]—A co. formed to acquire, manage, & deal with a block of buildings let out the rooms as unfurnished offices to tenants. The co. provided a staff to operate the lifts & to act as porters & watch & protect the building. The co. also provided certain services, such as heating & cleaning, for the tenants if required, at an additional charge. For each of the four years ending April 5, 1925, 1926, 1927, & 1928 the co. was assessed under Sched. A to income tax on the gross value of the building as appearing in the valuation list under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (c. 67). The co. admitted its liability to be assessed in respect of its profits from the services supplied to the tenants under Sched. D, but the Crown claimed in making the assessments under Sched. D to include the rents of the offices as part of the receipts of the trade, making allowance for tax assessed under Sched. A:—Held: the rents were profits arising from the ownership of land in respect of which the assessment under Sched. A was exhaustive, & they therefore could not be included in the assessment under Sched. D as trade receipts of the co.—FRY v. SALISBURY HOUSE ESTATE, LTD.; *JONES v. 116d. ——— & let to another brewer.]—A brewery co. who held a number of tied houses, both freehold & leasehold, by several agreements & deeds agreed to grant & subsequently granted leases of the houses, with the plant & fixtures connected with their brewery & the exclusive right to supply beer to the tied tenants, to another brewery co. for a term of years at a rent fixed by reference to the average net profits of the lessors for a period of years. Another brewery co. by an instrument purporting to be a lease agreed to transfer their tied houses & brewery business together with the benefit of all covenants in connection with the premises & the right to use their trade marks, trade labels & advertisements, to a firm of brewers for a term of years at a yearly rent. The tied houses comprised in the agreements & leases were assessed to income tax on their annual values under Sched. A., & the tied tenants of these houses deducted the tax paid by them from the rent they paid to the lessees, who in turn deducted the same amount from the rent they paid the lessors under the agreements & leases. The aggregate amount of the rents paid under the agreements & leases over a period of years exceeded the aggregate amount of the assessments under Sched. A. of the annual value of the tied houses over the same period:—Held: the lessors having paid the tax under Sched. A. were not liable to tax under Sched. D. in respect of the surplus except so far as, in the second case, it represented personal goodwill, user of trade marks, trade labels & advertisements & other property not being corporeal hereditaments.—WHELAN v. 116e. ——— Profits from letting cinema & café.]—Applt. co. built & equipped premises, including a cinema & a café, which it leased, together with the whole of the fixtures, fittings, etc., & also the goodwill of the businesses carried on at the cinema & café, to another co., for a period of twenty-one years at an annual rent, the lessees becoming responsible for maintenance & the rates & taxes being payable by the lessors. The rent reserved under the lease included the use of the furniture & other movable chattels in the café. The seats & other fittings in the cinema were affixed to & had become part of the freehold. In computing the co.'s profits for the purpose of assessment to income tax under Sched. D, the rent receivable under the lease was included as a receipt & the amount of the net assessment to income tax, Sched. A, on the premises was allowed as a deduction. On appeal, the co. contended that the rent was wrongly included in the computation of profits, except such part of it as was applicable to movable furniture & fittings, & that, subject to this exception, the liability in respect of the rent was, on the authority of the case of Salisbury House Estate, Ltd. v. Fry, covered by the assessment under Sched. A. The General Comrs. confirmed the assessments:—Held: the whole of the rent receivable was properly brought into assessment as part of the co.'s profits assessable under Sched. D.—WINDSOR PLAYHOUSE, LTD. v. HEYHOE (1933), 17 Tax Cas. 481.

The co. claimed that this sum should be allowed as a deduction in computing its profits & gains for the purposes of assessment:—Held: the payment was in respect of benefits over or derived from land within the scope of the extended definition in sect. 21 of Finance Act, 1934 (c. 32), & the co. was therefore not entitled, in computing its profits & gains for the purposes of assessment, to make a deduction in respect of the said payment.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 119a. “Trading” — What amounts to — Operations of partnership during winding up.]—Resp. firm carried on a large business of corn & seed merchants between Mar. 1923 & Mar. 31, 1926, when the partnership which was for a limited time came to an end. Under Partnership Act, 1890 (c. 39), s. 38, the partners, after dissolution, had authority to bind the firm, & their rights & obligations continued so far as necessary to wind-up the affairs of the partnership. At the time of dissolution, on Mar. 31, there were large contracts outstanding, & in the course of completing those contracts after dissolution a profit of £8,190 was made in the year ending Apr. 1927, which was assessed to income tax. In the course of the winding-up, large quantities of grain were delivered, payments for which were recovered & freight was paid; other items dealt with were discharging, lighterage, & storage of grain, arbitration fees, & gratuities to the late employees, bank charges, & interest. During the winding-up the partners & staff were thus employed, & the gratuities to the staff were given for their work. The comrs., on those facts, decided that the partners were trading during the winding-up, & the profits of such trading were consequently liable to income tax:—Held: what was done after dissolution constituted trading, the profits of which were rightly assessed to income tax.—*HILLERNS & FOWLER v. They treated their stock-in-trade as being of the value of £43,357, but the co. treated it as being worth £58,383:—Held: the difference between the two sums was not a profit derived from the business of the partnership, & resp. was not assessable for income tax in respect of his share of such difference.—*DOUGHTY v. sn. Carrying on a trade—What amounts to—Question of law.—The question whether a taxpayer in buying & selling land was carrying on the trade or business of a land jobber so as to make the proceeds of such sales part of his gross income is a question of law, & an inference drawn by the Special Income Tax Ct. from the facts found by it does not bind the ct. to which a case has been stated under s. 60 of Act 40 of 1925.—*INLAND REVENUE COMR. v. so. Statutory trustees managing recreation ground.—A body of trustees were appointed under a provisional order to hold & manage certain land in a burgh as a recreation ground. The trustees were in part elected by the holders of season tickets of admission to the ground, & in part appointed by the town council of the burgh from among its members. The ground was laid out in gardens, tennis courts, & bowling & putting greens & was open to the public on payment, admission being by season, monthly, fortnightly, or daily tickets. The great majority of those admitted were daily ticket holders. The revenue of the trustees from the sale of tickets exceeded the expenses of management:—Held: the trustees carried on a trade or business, & not a mutual assocn. for the benefit of a body of subscribers.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. sv. Profits from change of investments.—An insurance co. was empowered, in terms of its articles of assocn., “to sell, . . . deal with & turn to account any of the assets of the co.” The co. invested its reserve funds in British Govt. securities. From the date of the co.'s incorporation in 1919 till 1928 it occasionally changed its investments in these securities. In several years there were no sales of investments. In 1928 the co. made a profit of £4,800 on the realisation of certain investments. The General Comrs. found that this profit was not made by trading & was not assessable:—Held: the question whether a profit ments on a royalty basis. In respect of these payments resps. were assessed to income tax. The Crown contended that these payments were the profits of a trade within Sched. D, or that they were profits from lands not in resps.' occupation or possession & that thus the payments fell within r. 7 of No. II. of Sched. A. The Special Comrs. found that resps. were not carrying on a trade:—Held: the payments were not profits from the land, but were in substance receipts from a sale of the slag, & resps. were not liable to be assessed in respect thereof.—SHINGLER v. WILLIAMS (P.) & SONS (1933), 148 L. T. 474; 49 T. L. R. 221; 77 Sol. Jo. 139; 17 Tax Cas. 574.

119c. — Acquired on incorporation of company.]

—Resp. co. was incorporated in 1899 to carry on (inter alia) the businesses of steel manufacturers, ironmasters & colliery proprietors. On incorporation the co. took over certain slag heaps, then worthless, to one of which it made additions. In 1915 the co.'s operations in iron & steel ceased, & thereafter its trading activity was essentially that of colliery proprietors. The co. did not at any time work the slag or in any way actively seek to dispose of it, but after 1920 accepted offers by various persons to buy the slag, which had become valuable for road-making purposes. On appeal by the co. against an assessment to income tax under Sched. D in respect of its trading profits, including the profits from the sales of slag, the General Comrs. found that the co. had not carried on any trading activity in relation to the disposal of the slag heaps & that the receipts from the sale of slag were not receipts arising from any of its trading operations & were not assessable:—Held: the question at issue was one of fact for the determination of the Comrs. & there was evidence on which they could arrive at their decision.—BEAMS v. WEARDALE STEEL, COAL & COKE CO., LTD. (1937), 81 Sol. Jo. 686; 21 Tax Cas. 204.

119d. Advances by agent to principal—Exchange profits.]

—Applts., who carried on business as fur & skin merchants & as agents, were appointed sole commission agents of a co. for the sale, in Britain & elsewhere, of furs exported from Russia, on the terms (inter alia), that they should advance to the co. a part of the value of each consignment. All the transactions between applts. & the co. were conducted on a dollar basis, & owing to fluctuations in the rate of exchange between the dates when advances in dollars were made by applts. to the co. against goods consigned & the dates when applts. recouped themselves for the advances on the sale of the goods, a profit accrued to applts. on the conversion of repaid advances into sterling:—Held: the exchange profits arose directly in the course of applts.' business with the co. & formed part of applts.' trading receipts for the purpose of computing their profits under Case I of Sched. D.—LANDES BROS. v. SIMPSON (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 62.

119e. Executors postponing realisation of partnership estate.]—M., H. & R. carried on in partnership a trade of dealing in land. Land purchased by the partnership was, by agreement, developed & sold by a limited co., & the price to be paid to the partnership for the land so developed was fixed after the sale. H. died & at the date of his death certain land belonging to the partnership was in the course of development by the limited co. His exors. agreed that the most practicable way in which to realise the assets was to allow the development of the land to be completed, & to postpone the account until the land had been sold. His exors. were assessed for income tax on the profits made after H.'s death on the ground that they were carrying on the partnership business:—Held: there was no evidence that H.'s exors. had agreed to carry on the partnership business, the agreement being merely to postpone their right to an account & to their share of the proceeds until such time as it was practicable to realise the assets.—*MARSHALL AND HODD'S EXECUTORS AND ROGERS v. 119f. Trade carried on by company as agent for liquidator.]—Under an agreement, whereby a co. sold all its assets to applt. co., it was agreed that, in the event of the liquidation of applt. co., applt. co. would sell & the vendor co. would purchase (inter alia) applt. co.'s goodwill, copyright in films, & the benefit of all booking agreements for certain films entered into by applt. co. It was provided that the vendor co. should perform & carry into effect on behalf of the liquidator of applt. co. all booking agreements entered into by applt. co. prior to the commencement of the winding up, & that the vendor co. should pay to the liquidator of applt. co. a sum equivalent to 90 per cent. of the gross moneys received by the vendor co. under such booking agreements after deducting therefrom all moneys which the vendor co. might have expended in performing & carrying into effect such booking agreements. The

was made by trading was one of fact & there was evidence justifying the finding of the Comrs.—I. R. COMRS. v. SCOTTISH AUTOMOBILE & GENERAL INSURANCE CO., [1932] S. C. 87; 16 Tax Cas. 381.—SCOT.

sz. "Punting."—Applt., a grazier, made betting losses during the year 1928–29, amounting to £12,191 18s., & claimed that such losses were the result of carrying on the business of "punting" at horse & pony courses & therefore, such losses should be deducted from income derived by him from a grazing business in the same year. The Comr. refused to allow the deduction & the question for the Ct. was whether applt. was carrying on the business of betting between July 1, 1927, and July, 1929, when his betting activities came to a sudden end.

Applt. made a declaration which was forwarded to the Comr., stating that during the early part of 1927, he conceived the idea of the possibilities of utilising a racing system. The only system he adopted was that of endeavouring to get "the very best information." Applt. made a considerable number of wagers with bookmakers during the period & lost much money. He kept no books & no record of his wins or losses:—Held: applt. was not carrying on a business of betting.—JONES v. FEDERAL TAXATION COMR. (1932), 2 A. T. D. 16; 6 A. L. J. 201.—AUS.

The question arose as to whether the liquidator was liable to pay tax upon the sums representing 90 per cent. of the moneys received under the booking agreements & paid to the liquidator of applt. co.:—Held: there was evidence on which the comrs. could find that the vendor co. was carrying on a trade on behalf of the liquidator of applt. co., who was therefore liable to be taxed upon the profits made.—*BAKER v. 122a. — Land in settlement.]—Applt. co., which was incorporated in 1927 with wide powers (inter alia), to develop & dispose of lands & other property, acquired, by purchase, from the life tenant of certain settled estates, all the funds & properties subject to the settlement, including therein some twelve hundred acres of land adjoining a populous town. All the issued preference shares of the co. were allotted to the life tenant & all the issued ordinary shares, with the exception of seven shares to the subscribers of the memorandum of association, were allotted to the trustees of the settlement.

Applt. co. proceeded to develop a part of the land as building sites & to sell off portions of the estate as opportunities arose. Certain areas were laid out as desirable sites, involving expenditure on development by the co., & the developed sites were sold in plots to appts. Between the date of its incorporation & the date of the appeal to the Comrs., the co. sold 31 acres of land, including 14 acres for building purposes, in 411 transactions of sale. The co. throughout treated the proceeds of its sales of lands as transactions on capital account & no portion of these profits was distributed to the shareholders. The co. appealed against an assessment to income tax under Sched. D for the year 1930–31 in respect of “property dealings” on the ground that it was not carrying on any trade of dealers in land & property, but was merely continuing in a more convenient manner the scheme of development pursued by the trustees of the settlement & the tenant for life. The General Comrs. decided that the profits from the sales of lands were the profits of a trade or business & assessable to income tax:—Held: there was evidence on which the Comrs. could arrive at their conclusion of fact that the co. was carrying on a trade of dealing in property.—ST. AUBYN ESTATES, LTD. v. STRICK (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 412.

Its memorandum of association contained wide powers with regard to dealing in property. In its early years the co. confined itself to building for customers, but in course of time its activities came to include the buying of land & the erecting of buildings, which were let to tenants & subsequently sold. the buying, reconstruction & sale of buildings, & the buying & selling of property. d i. — Formed to acquire estate—Profit on resale.]—A limited co. was formed in 1911 to acquire a heritable estate belonging to a trust, the shareholders being the beneficiaries of the trust. The objects of the co., as set forth in its memorandum of assocn., included the purchase, development, & sale of heritable property. The co. held the estate till 1921, after which it gradually sold portions of it. It also bought in 1911, & re-sold in 1925, another heritable property:—Held: the co. was assessable to income tax under Sched. sw. Fines & ground rents received by builder.]—A builder took on lease a plot of ground for a term of years subject to a ground rent. On this plot he built several houses which he sold. The sale of these houses was effected by way of sub-demise for a term of years subject to a certain ground rent in each case. He also received a certain sum of money in each case by way of fine. For the purpose of his assessment to income tax under Sched. D, the total amounts of the fines were treated as receipts & a further amount was included in respect of the ground rents reserved by him, so far as they exceeded the ground rent payable by him, this amount being arrived at by estimating the capital value of such excess ground rents:—Held: the builder was not liable to be assessed under Sched. D together with the rest of the co.'s profits:—Held: on the facts of the case the Comrs. were justified in arriving at their conclusion.—SPIERS & SON, LTD. v. OGDEN (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 117.

122d. Ground annuals.—A firm of builders carried on the business of purchasing vacant land, on which they built houses & then sold portions of the land with houses thereon. As purchase-price of each house with its portion of land they demanded & received a sum of money & a "ground annual," i.e., a perpetual annuity of a fixed sum secured upon the house & ground. Ground annuals have at any given date an ascertainable value in cash, which is estimated at seventeen years' purchase:—Held: the realisable value of ground annuals created during the builders' financial year must be included among their profits & gains for that year, & were chargeable to income tax under Sched. D.—EMERY (JOHN) & SONS v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1937] A. C. 91; 156 L. T. 87, II. L.

122e. Full purchase-price not paid.—A co. carried on the business of buying land, building thereon small houses, & selling the houses & portions of the land. At the request of the co. a building society advanced to an intending purchaser of a house the whole of the purchase-money upon a mtge. of the purchaser's interest in the house. The purchase-money was repayable with interest thereon in equal monthly instalments. Part only of the purchase-money was paid to the co. & the balance was retained by the building society as a deposit by the co. until the purchaser had repaid an agreed part of the purchase-money. The sum deposited was then released. In the meantime the society allowed the co. interest upon the amount deposited:—Held: that sums so deposited by the co., if capable of valuation, should be valued for the purposes of income tax under Case I. of Sched. D. of Income Tax Act, 1918; but if not capable of valuation they should be treated as liable to tax only when they were released to the co.—HARRISON v. CRONK & SONS, LTD., [1937] A. On appeal against assessments upon applts. under Sched. (2) A Danish co. & an English co. established a line of steamers between Copenhagen & Hull, & the English co. were appointed exclusive agents for the Danish co. at Hull. The English co. controlled the freights at this end, quoted rates, accepted consignments of goods & put them on board the steamers of the Danish co. The bills of lading were signed "for the master" by one of the English co.'s clerks. The English co. collected the freights for outward bound goods & any other moneys due from the consignors, & remitted what was due to the Danish co. On an appeal against assessments to income tax for the four years ended Apr. 5, 1913–1916 of the English co. as agents for the Danish co.:—Held: on the principle of Erichsen v. Last, No. 168, the Danish co. exercised a trade in the United Kingdom to the extent to which goods were taken on board their ships at Hull for carriage elsewhere, & this trade was carried on by the British co. as their regular agents. Therefore, the Danish co. were assessable to income tax in the name of the British co. for the three years ended Apr. 5, 1915, under 1842 Act, s. 41, in respect of the profits arising from such trade, so far as regards freights collected by the British co. in respect of such goods, & for the year ended Apr. 5, 1916, under 1842 Act, s. 41, as amended by Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915 (c. 89), s. 31, in respect of all the profits arising from such trade, whether the freights were collected by the British co. or not.

(3) Two Dutch shipping companies owned four steamships known as the Batavier Line which traded regularly between Rotterdam & London. A Dutch firm, W. & Co., were the directors & had the management & control of both companies, & were also the shipping agents of both companies. By an agreement in 1899 made between the Dutch firm & one of the companies the firm were authorised to appoint sub-agents, where they deemed it necessary. In 1904, & again in 1916, the Dutch firm appointed appts. sole agents in London of the Batavier Line & thereafter appts. did all that was required to be done in connection with the ships of the Batavier Line in London. Assessments to income tax having been made on appts. as agents of the Dutch companies in respect of the profits of their business of shipowners:—Held: the Dutch companies were exercising a trade in the United Kingdom, even assuming that the Dutch firm, in appointing appts. as agents, acted as shipping agents & not as directors, they nevertheless constituted appts. direct agents of the two Dutch companies in London.—*TARN v. sa. Realisation of wool by Imperial Government—Whether profits earned in Victoria.—Pursuant to an agreement between the Imperial & Commonwealth Governments, resp. co. was incorporated in 1920 in Victoria, with a head office at Melbourne, for the purpose of selling the undisposed of surplus of wool acquired for the war, & distributing the proceeds. The Commonwealth Govt. transferred to the co. its undivided half of the Australian wool & in cash its share of profits already realised, in consideration of the issue of priority wool certificates & fully-paid shares to its nominees, the wool suppliers. The co. also agreed with the Imperial Govt. to sell on its behalf for a commission all the rest of the wool, whether Australian or not. The wool was all sold during the years 1921 to 1924; the co. had no other dealings in wool. The contracts of sale were made, & deliveries & payments thereunder took place, outside Australia. The proceeds of the half share of the Australian wool largely exceeded the sum at which it had been taken into the books of the co. The priority wool certificates were redeemed, & the whole of the capital credited as paid on the shares was paid off under successive schemes sanctioned by the ct.; there remained a large surplus in the hands of the liquidator of the co. Assessments were made upon the co. under the Income Tax Act, 1915, of Victoria, in respect of proportions of the surplus proceeds of sale & of the commission earned. The co. raised objections thereto, & a special case was stated:—Held: (1) the surplus resulted merely from the realisation of capital assets, & therefore no part of it was income chargeable to tax under sect. 35 of the Act; (2) no part of the surplus, or of the commission, was a profit "earned in or derived in or from Victoria" so as to be chargeable to tax under that sect.—*TAXES COMR. v. sb. — Whether profits earned in Queensland.—As the general scheme of the Queensland Income Tax Act of 1924 bases liability to tax thereunder upon the source of the income, not the residence of the taxpayer, being in Queensland, & as the power of a legislature to tax property, whether real or personal, is limited territorially, sect. 10 (2) of the Act, which purports to tax profits arising from the sale of "any personal property whatsoever," applies only to personal property in Queensland; so, too, para. (ii) (b), which was added to sect. 10 (2) by an amending Act of 1926, & purports to tax money received from a co. in respect of shares issued in circumstances stated in para. (ii) (a), cannot be construed as referring to a co. which does not carry on business, or possess assets, or derive its profits from a source in Queensland. Consequently, a wool grower resident in Queensland is not liable to income tax under sect. 10 (2) of the above Act in respect of sums received by him as a shareholder in the British Australian Wool Realization Association, Ltd. Further, the excess of the sums so received over the market value of the shares when issued cannot be treated as an addition to the profits of the shareholder's business, because income tax having been paid by him upon the shares when issued they became property with its own incidence, if any, to tax.—*TAXES COMR. v. If the co. accepted it they cabled to applt. accordingly who notified the bidder, usually first by telephone & later in writing. Applt. received neither the goods nor documents relating to them nor did he collect any moneys. He was paid a commission on all orders originating in his "territory." (b) "Consignment business." Consignments were sent by the co. to applt. to be sold on its behalf. They were sold by auction. The bills of lading were made out to applt. It was assessed to income tax on the profits arising from its trade exercised in London under Case I. of Sched. D of 1918 Act for the financial year 1928–29 in the sum of £94,448. It possessed, as part of the assets of its London branch, holdings of 5 per cent. War Loan, India Govt. 3 per cent. stock, & securities of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway & the Auckland Electric Power Board, purchased out of the floating capital of the London branch, & other moneys obtained in New Zealand, to borrow which it had expended £41,262. The interest on the War Loan & other stocks amounted to £78,556 for the period in question:—Held: this sum of £78,556 was altogether exempt from income tax, the War Loan under sect. 46 of 1918 Act, the interest on the India Govt. Stock under rule 2 (d) of the General Rules applicable to Sched. C, & the interest on the other securities under rule 7 of the Miscellaneous Rules under Sched. D, & did not become taxable by being included in trading profits assessable under Case I. of Sched. D; (2) the bank was entitled for the purposes of assessment to deduct from its profits its proper trading expenses, including therein the sum of £41,262, being the expenses particularly attributable to the

An assessment was therefore made upon it for the year ending Apr. 5, 1926:—Held: the assessment should be under the rule applicable to Case I. of Sched. D. in respect of its profits "upon a fair & just average of three years ending on that day of the year immediately preceding the year of assessment." The fact that the seat of the co.'s continuing business was transferred to England did not mean that at the date of transfer its trade was "set up & commenced" within the meaning of rule 1 (2) applicable to Cases I. & II., so as to make it liable to assessment upon the profits of its first year's trading as a co. registered in England.—*FRY v. From 1917-18 to 1927-28 inclusive the assessments were made upon an earnings basis. The inspector then arranged, at the request of the taxpayer, that, from & including the year 1928-29, the profits of the profession should once more be assessed upon the cash basis; & for 1928-29 he computed those profits at £1,665, being the excess of cash receipts over disbursements during 1927-28. The taxpayer contended that, as the figure of £1,665 to the extent of £1,362 represented outstandings as at Apr. 5, 1927 (that is, sums earned before but not paid until after that date), & as that figure of £1,362 had been taken into computation in ascertaining his income on the 200c. ——— Company owning cinemas—New cinema opened—Whether new trade.—Appl. co. was incorporated in May, 1929, with the objects (inter alia) of (a) acquiring a cinema at Portsmouth as a going concern; (b) carrying on the business of cinema theatre proprietors & managers & of producing cinema pictures, plays, etc.; & (c) constructing cinema theatres, etc.

The purchase of the Portsmouth cinema was completed in June, 1929, & in Aug. 1929, the co. started business at that house. In Sept. 1929, it acquired two sites in London, on one of which it arranged for a cinema to be built. In Feb. 1930, the co. acquired the lease of a cinema at Southsea & started business there a month later. In Dec. 1930, the cinemas at Portsmouth & Southsea were sold to another co. as going concerns. Immediately thereafter, the newly erected London cinema was opened, but the coincidence of dates was entirely fortuitous. Separate revenue accounts were prepared for the Portsmouth & Southsea theatres, but the results for the year were brought into a general profit & loss account & balance sheet of the whole of the co.'s business. On appeal against assessments made on it under Sched. D. for the year 1930-31, on the basis of its actual profits of the year ended Apr. 5, 1931, the co. contended that it carried on throughout one trade, that of running cinemas; that there was no discontinuance of this trade on the sale of the Portsmouth & Southsea theatres & no new trade was set up & commenced when the London cinema was opened; & that its liability should be on the profits for one year from the date of commencement of its trade. The Special Comrs. decided that a new trade was set up on the opening of the London cinema in Dec. 1930:—Held: there was evidence upon which the Special Comrs. could arrive at their conclusion of fact that a new trade was commenced in Dec. 1930.—*H. & G. earnings basis for the previous year, it had already been assessed to tax; & accordingly, the assessment for 1928-29 should be reduced by £1,362. It appeared that, upon the former change over from the cash basis, the profits for the first year of assessment on the earnings basis had been increased by the inclusion of the amount of outstandings at the end of the period on which the assessment was based, & the taxpayer argued that, on a return to the cash basis, the profits for the first year of assessment thereafter should be correspondingly reduced by the deduction of the amount of outstandings at the commencement of the period of assessment:—Held: the item of £1,362 represented outstandings at the commencement of the period of assessment, although an appropriate deduction in an assessment upon an earnings basis, was not a proper deduction in assessing profits on a cash basis, upon which basis the taxpayer had elected to be assessed.—*INLAND REVENUE v. 204f. Option to be assessed otherwise than on basis of preceding year—Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 29 (3)—Necessity for receipt of profits in period preceding three years anterior to year of assessment.]—A co. took over a business as a going concern as from Apr. 3, 1925, & was assessed for the years 1925–26 & 1926–27 by reference to the average profits of preceding years as having succeeded to the trade. The profits of the business for each of the years ending Mar. 31, 1925, & Mar. 31, 1926, were less than the average annual profits for the six years ending Mar. 31, 1924. The co. having given due notice, claimed that it was entitled under Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 29 (3), to be assessed for the year 1927–28 on the basis of the average profits of the business for the three years ending Mar. 31, 1927:—Held: the co. not having been in possession of the source of the profits for any part of the period preceding the three years mentioned in the sub-sect., the sub-sect. was not applicable, notwithstanding that the co. fell to be treated for income tax purposes as successors in the business.—BROWN (E. G.) & CO., LTD. v. STEWART (1929), 14 Tax Cas. 423.

— — — — —.]—*Appl. co. was formed in Oct. 1924, to take over a partnership business of wool merchants, the partners themselves becoming the holders of practically all the shares. In the year ending Mar. 31, 1926, the co. sustained a loss of £64,016. Under Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), Part IV., dealing with income tax, the assessment on a three years' average was abolished, & it was provided that the profits for income tax purposes should be computed on the amount for the year preceding the year of assessment. It being obvious that in the readjustment of the system in that way hardship would arise, to mitigate certain cases of hardship sect. 29 (3), was framed. The question in dispute was whether in the circumstances above set out the co. had shown that it was within the mischief which sub-sect. 3 aimed at alleviating. The co. contended that sects. 28 & 29 of Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), were intended to cover all cases where the abolition of the three years' average would cause exceptional hardship, & also that in a case where there had been a change of ownership of the business during the three years on which the 1927–28 average would have been computed the new owners, in this case the co., should be treated as having been in notional possession of the source during the six years mentioned in sub-sect. 3 of sect. 29 preceding the three average years. On an appeal against an assessment to income tax Sched. D for the year ending Apr. 5, 1928, in £68,032 less £539 wear & tear allowance, the comrs. held that the co. came within the provisions of sect. 29 (3), & were entitled to the relief granted by that sub-sect., & they reduced the assessment to £5,480 less the £539.—Held: though the co. could bring their case within the first part of sect. 29 (3), it became impossible to apply that part of the sect. unless the co. could show that it was in possession of the profits during the six years, preceding the three years before 1926–27, but in fact the co. was not in possession of the profits for any portion of those six years. To work the sub-sect. the co. must have been in possession for some part of the six years, either all of it or part of it. The co. must have been in possession or the sub-sect. did not arise at all.—BETTS v. LAYCOCK, SONS & CO., LTD. (1930), 142 L. T. 506; 15 Tax Cas. 431, C. A.*

—.]—The taxpayer's wife succeeded on Feb. 1, 1924, to a business previously carried on by her father. Accounts of the business were made up for the eleven months to Dec. 31, 1924, & thereafter annually to Dec. 31, until Dec. 31, 1927. The taxpayer was assessed to income tax in respect of the profits of this business for the years 1927–28 & 1928–29 by reference to the profits of the preceding years ended Dec. 31, 1926, & Dec. 31, 1927, respectively. He appealed to the General Comrs. against the 1927–28 assessment & to the Special Comrs. against the 1928–29 assessment, claiming in respect of each year that he was entitled to be assessed on the average of the three preceding years by reference to Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 29 (3). The General Comrs. allowed the appeal for 1927–28. The Special Comrs. refused the appeal for 1928–29. Appeals were entered against each decision:—Held: as the taxpayer was not in possession of the business during any part of the six years preceding the three years upon the average of which he would have been assessed for 1927–28, i.e., the three years ended Dec. 31, 1926, the case did not fall within the application of sect. 29 (3).—ALLEN v. MARGOLINSKY, MARGOLINSKY v. ALLEN (1931), 16 Tax Cas. 77.

— Validity of notice—Notice by accountants.]—A firm of chartered accountants had been employed by applt. co. as their accountants & auditors for many years. They had each year interviewed & corresponded with the appropriate inspector of taxes with regard to the co.'s income tax liabilities with a view to agreement as to the figures upon which liability was to be based. All returns were signed by the co.'s duly authorised officer. The co. was admittedly entitled to exercise the option with regard to the basis of assessment afforded by Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 29 (3), if it so desired.

The accountants informed the inspector in two letters dated Oct. 3 & 4, 1927, that the co. claimed "to be charged for the year 1927–28" as if sect. 29 had not been passed. No reference was made to the year 1928–29.

In a letter dated Oct. 25, 1927, the accountants purported to withdraw the claim. The amount of the liability for the year 1927–28 computed on the average basis was greater than the amount on the preceding year basis. The co. appealed against an additional assessment for the year 1927–28 on the difference between these amounts, contending, inter alia, that the accountants had no authority to give the notice required by the sect. & that valid & effective notice was not given. It was not suggested that the accountants had specific authority to lodge the notice or that the co. had confirmed the accountants' action:—Held: the accountants had not a general authority to bind the taxpayer in the matter; they had not been held out as having such authority; & further the notices were invalid as purporting to be made by reference to one year only. 204k. Trade set up within two years of year of assessment—Effect of Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 29 & Finance Act, 1927 (c. 10), s. 28.]—The K.

Rubber Estates, Ltd., commenced to trade on July 16, 1925. The co. claimed that the assessment made upon it under sched. D for the year 1927–28 should be reduced to the amount of the profits of the year of assessment, on the ground that sect. 23 of Finance Act, 1927, extended the application of proviso (a) of sect. 29 (1) of Finance Act, 1926, so as to cover any case where a trade had been set up or commenced within the period of two years referred to in sect. 23. The special comrs. on appeal refused the co.'s claim:—Held: sect. 23 of Finance Act, 1927, did not so extend the application of proviso (a) of sect. 29 (1) of Finance Act, 1926.—KUALA MUDA RUBBER ESTATES, LTD. v. TODD (1930), 15 Tax Cas. 440.

204m. — Reconstitution—Additional assessment under Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 31 (1) (b)—Meaning of "been charged."]—A change in the constitution of H. & Co. No. 1, a firm, took place in Mar. 1929, & H. & Co. No. 2 came into existence. No notice under r. 11 (1) of the Rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D, as amended by Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 32 (1), that the tax should be computed as if the trade had been discontinued & a new trade set up, was given. In Mar. 1930, a change in the constitution of H. & Co. No. 2 took place, & H. & Co. No. 3 came into existence, & in this case due notice as above was given. The profits earned by H. & Co. No. 1 in the year ending Apr. 5, 1928, were £50,000; for the year ending Apr. 5, 1929, they earned £114,000. The profits of H. & Co. No. 2 for the year ending Apr. 5, 1930, were nil. H. & Co. No. 1 were assessed for the year ending Apr. 5, 1929, in £50,000. H. & Co. No. 2, by reason of the above notice, were assessed in the year ending Apr. 5, 1930, on the profits of that year under sect. 31 (1) (a), of 1926 Act—namely, nil—and not on £114,000, as would have been the case had the above notice not been given. By sect. 31 (1) (b) of 1926 Act: "If the profits . . . of the year ending on Apr. 5 in the year preceding the year of assessment in which the discontinuance [of the trade] occurs exceed the amount on which the person has been charged for that preceding year . . . an additional assessment may be made upon him." Under that sub-sect. an additional assessment of £64,000, being the difference between £50,000 & £114,000, was then made on H. & Co. No. 2 in respect of the year ending Apr. 5, 1929:—Held: H. & Co. No. 2 were not chargeable in the additional assessment, inasmuch as not they but H. & Co. No. 1 had "been charged" for that year within the sub-sect.—OSLER v. HALL & Co., [1933] 1 K. B. 720; 102 L. J. K. B. 676; 149 L. T. 19; 17 Tax Cas. 68.

204n. — Question of fact for Commissioners.]—Prior to Apr. 1, 1930, H. carried on the business of contracting with film cos. for the "processing" of films. He employed only a clerical staff, the technical work, under an arrangement between him & T., being done by T. at another address for an agreed price. H. delivered the finished products to the cos. & was paid by them for the whole of the work done, H. paying T. for his share in the work. T.'s business was confined to orders given by H. On Apr. 1, 1930, H. took T. into partnership. The business of film processing was continued by the firm in the same manner & for the same customers as before, H. obtaining the contracts for the film processing on behalf of the firm & T. attending to the technical side of the work. The business was at first carried on at the same separate addresses of H. & T. as before & later on at additional premises. Up to & including 1929-30 H. & T. were separately assessed on the profits of their respective businesses. Each business was treated as permanently discontinued on Apr. 1, 1930, & the partnership was treated as having set up & commenced a new business as from that date. H. appealed against additional assessments made upon him for the years 1928-29 & 1929-30, under sect. 31 of Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), & the partnership appealed against the assessment for 1930-31 which was made on the basis of its profits for the year of assessment. It was contended (a) that the business carried on by H. on his own account had not been permanently discontinued on Apr. 1, 1930, & that after that date he was engaged in the same trade but as a partner in a partnership, & (b) that, consequently, the additional assessments on H. for the years 1928-29 & 1929-30 should be discharged & the assessment on the partnership for the year 1930-31 should be computed on the basis of the profits of the preceding year in accordance with sect. 32 of Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22). The Special Comrs. found that on the formation of the partnership an amalgamation of two separate & distinct businesses took place, creating a new business, & they confirmed the assessments:—Held: the matters in issue were questions of fact for the determination of the Comrs. & there was evidence upon which the Comrs. could arrive at their conclusion.—HUMPHRIES & Co. v. COOK (1934), 19 Tax Cas. 121.

204o. Assessment based on invoice price—Subsequent additional payments.]—A co. which was under contract to supply ironstone at fluctuating prices, subject to a specified maximum, entered into negotiations with its customers with regard to the supply of larger quantities of ironstone at increased prices. An understanding, conditional upon the success of certain general negotiations in progress, was reached in Mar. 1919, as to a new schedule of prices to take effect as from May 1, 1919. A definitive agreement was signed in Dec. 1925, & was deemed to have come into operation on Dec. 31, 1920. For some time after May 1, 1919, ironstone was invoiced by the co. to its customers at the old prices; but during subsequent accounting periods the co. was paid, by instalments, a sum representing the difference between the invoiced prices & the prices calculated according to the schedule agreed in Mar. 1919. On appeal against certain estimated assessments to income tax, the co. contended that this sum was received as a capital payment & not as the price of ironstone; or, alternatively, that the instalments could only be brought into account in the years in which they were paid. The Special Comrs. held that the amount in question was a revenue payment & must be related to the period during which the ironstone, by reference to which the sum was calculated, was delivered:—Held: the Special Comrs.' decision was correct.—FRODINGHAM IRONSTONE MINES, LTD. v. STEWART (1932), 16 Tax Cas. 728.

204p. Reimbursement by auditors of sum misappropriated.]—By the fraud of two quarry officials at resp.'s quarries larger amounts were entered in the wages sheets than were due for wages. These larger amounts were received, the wages were properly paid, & the officials took the balance for themselves. After a number of years the frauds were discovered, & the auditors, without admitting liability, admitted that a clerk was negligent in not making inquiries, & by arrangement they paid to resp. the whole amount of the defalcations:—Held: the sums paid by the accountants were trading receipts properly assessable to tax & should be brought into account in the year in which they were received.

Semble: instead of treating the whole amount as a receipt in the year in which the whole was received, it was open to the Crown to reopen the previous assessments & correct the accounts of those years in respect of the repayment in respect of the defalcations.—*GRAY v. Informal arrangement during coal strike.]—A Glasgow coal merchant & a London firm of coal exporters & importers made, during a coal strike, an informal business arrangement, the main feature of which was that coal was invoiced by the firm to the merchant at cost, the merchant to pay also to the firm one-half of whatever net excess over this cost price he might obtain from his customers. The arrangement continued for a few months only & was brought to an end by an accounting & division of profits between the parties. The special comrs. on appeal proceedings decided that, having regard to all the facts of the conduct of the business between the parties, the trade in question was carried on jointly within r. 10, Rules applicable to Cases I. & II., Sched. D, & they found as a fact that the transactions involved were partnership transactions. An assessment was accordingly confirmed charging the total profits in one sum separately from any other liabilities of the parties:—Held: the evidence justified the comrs.' decision.—*GARDNER (JOHN) & BOWRING, HARDY & CO., LTD. v. The deed, which was expressed to have effect as from Jan. 1, 1929, was executed on May 11, 1929. No formal notice of the partnership was at any time given by advertisement, circular or otherwise. No alteration of the name under which the practice was carried on, or in the business bank account, was made until after the date of the partnership deed. From Dec. 31, 1928, the son was credited with the share of profits to which he was entitled under the partnership deed. Applt. appealed to the General Comrs. against an assessment to income tax, Sched. D., made upon him for the year 1929–30, contending that a partnership existed between himself & his son as from Jan. 1, 1929. The Comrs. held that for income tax purposes the partnership commenced on May 11, 1929, the date of the partnership deed:—Held: the partnership constituted by the deed commenced on the date of the deed & there was no evidence before the comrs. of the existence of a partnership before that date.—*WADDINGTON v. — Whether profits in year of assessment may be considered.—On Mar. 1, 1919, a firm set up a new trade. On Dec. 31, 1919, they made up the first account of the trade for the ten months from Mar. 1, 1919, to Dec. 31, 1919, that account showing a profit for that period of £1,000. The firm sold the trade as from Jan. 1, 1920, to a co. consisting of the same persons. The co. made up an account of the profits of their trade for three months from Jan. 1, 1920, to Mar. 31, 1920, showing a profit for those three months of over £12,000. For the year ending Apr. 5, 1919, the assessment to income tax under 1918 Act, Sched. D., was made on the firm in a sum equal to a proportionate part, from Mar. 1 to Apr. 5, of the profits shown by the account to Dec. 1919, & it was agreed that that was correct. For year ending Apr. 5, 1920, assessments were made on the firm & the co. on a sum representing twelve-thirteenths of the profits shown by combining the two accounts for the respective periods of ten months & three months, that sum being apportioned between the firm & the co. according to their respective liabilities. The firm & co. appealed against the assessments on the ground that they ought to have been made on a sum representing twelve-tenths of the sum shown in the account for the ten months from Mar. 1 to Dec. 31, 1919, & the comrs. acceded to this argument:—Held: upon the true construction of r. 1 (2) of the rules applicable to Cases I. & II., except in the case of a trade set up within the year of assessment, the profits should be computed without bringing in any profits of the year of assessment.—*CLARE & HEYWORTH v. 210a. — — — — — Resp. co. was incorporated & commenced trading on Aug. 16, 1926. Its first account, for the period from Aug. 16, 1926, to Mar. 31, 1927, showed a loss & its second account, for the year ended Mar. 31, 1928, showed a profit. The co., on an appeal against an assessment for 1927–28 in respect of its trading profit contended that, having regard to the decision in the case of Betts v. Clare & Heyworth, No. 210, its liability for that year should be computed solely by reference to the account for the period ended Mar. 31, 1927. The Crown contended that the liability should be based on the results for the year ended Aug. 15, 1927, ascertained, in accordance with Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 35, by the inclusion in respect of the period Apr. 1 to Aug. 15, 1927, of the appropriate proportion of the profit shown by the account for the year ended Mar. 31, 1928:—Held: as a result of the amendments to r. 1 (2) of the rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D. effected by Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 36, & Sched. IV., the decision in the case of Betts v. Clare & Heyworth, No. 210, had no application, & the 1927–28 assessment should be computed in accordance with the Crown's contentions.—MANSON v. PERRYS (EALING), LTD. (1931), 16 Tax Cas. 60.

210c. — — — — — Partnership.—By a deed dated Nov. 22, 1922, A. & B., partners in a firm, dissolved partnership as from Apr. 1, 1922.

Upon the dissolution of the partnership A. continued to carry on business at the firm's address, but from Nov. 22, 1922, until his death in June, 1923, B. carried on, in his own name at his private address, a small amount of business previously done by the firm. By a deed dated Dec. 15, 1922, A. took C. into partnership as from Apr. 1, 1922. An assessment having been made on the firm for 1922-23 upon the average of the profits for the three years ended Mar. 31, 1922, the comrs. found that the partnership between A. & B. was not dissolved until Nov. 22, 1922, & that there had been no discontinuance of the business, but that A. had succeeded to the business of A. & B., & that A. & C. had succeeded to the business carried on by A. after the dissolution of his partnership with B.:—Held: there was evidence upon which the comrs. could come to their conclusions, & they had not misdirected themselves in law.—*FARADAY, RODGERS & ELLER v. 210e. — Absence of formal contract.]—During Mar. 1928, there were negotiations & detailed correspondence between the resp. co. & another co. who were proposing to purchase the business of resp. co., culminating in a letter dated Mar. 21, 1928, in which the prospective purchasers indicated that the terms contained in the correspondence, & as arranged at interviews between the parties, were generally accepted "subject to such terms being fully set out in a formal contract or agreement, to be submitted to us & finally approved of." On Mar. 29, 1928, two of the directors of resp. co. resigned & entered the service of the purchasers. On Mar. 30 resps. gave notice to their foreign agents terminating their engagements. The formal contract was dated Apr. 18, 1928. Resp. co. were assessed for the year 1927-28 in accordance with the provisions of rule 11 (2) on the footing that the succession took place after Apr. 5, 1928. The General Comrs. allowed their appeal against this assessment, finding that a contract for the sale & purchase of the business existed before Apr. 6, 1928. The Crown appealed:—Held: the correspondence did not constitute a contract & that there was no evidence of a de facto succession before Apr. 6.—TODD v. JONES BROS., LTD. (1930), 15 Tax Cas. 396.

210f. — Purchase from liquidator.]—A co. carried on business as (a) motor engineers, (b) cinema theatre proprietors, & until a short time before going into liquidation, (c) haulage contractors & char-a-banc proprietors. On the liquidation of the co. applts. purchased the co.'s lands & property & stock-in-trade, the purchase-price being £18,000, of which £15,850 was stated, in the agreement of sale, to be in respect of lands & property, & £150 in respect of stock. Applts. retained the co.'s employees & continued without any interruption the work in the co.'s hands. They carried on business as motor engineers & as cinema theatre proprietors but not at any time as haulage contractors & char-a-banc proprietors. The General Comrs. held that applts. had not succeeded to the business previously carried on by the co.:—Held: there were no grounds for disturbing the Comrs.' decision as being erroneous in point of law.—WILSON & BARLOW v. CHIBBETT (1929), 14 Tax Cas. 407.

210g. — Transfer of tied houses to different brewery.]—Applt. co., a brewery co., acquired the control of another co., the B. Brewery Co. by an arrangement whereby the shareholders in the latter exchanged their shares for shares in applt. co. The B. Co. then leased its brewery & its tied houses, comprising the whole of its property, licensed & unlicensed, to applt. co. at an annual rent. Applt. co. supplied its own products to the tied houses, which became "tied" to them, & brewing at the B. Co.'s brewery immediately ceased. Shortly after the date of the lease applt. co. purchased all the stock & loose effects of the B. co., & about a year later they purchased the brewery at a valuation, the lease, as regards the brewery, thus only remaining in effect for about eighteen months. Applt. co. appealed against assessments made on the footing that it had succeeded to the business of the B. Co. & that accordingly in arriving at applt. co.'s liability the profits of the B. Co. should be brought into the computation. The General Comrs. held that the assessments had been correctly so made:—Held: the matter was primarily a question of fact & there were no grounds for disturbing the Comrs.' decision.—SHIPSTONE (JAMES) & SONS, LTD. v. MORRIS (1929), 14 Tax Cas. 413.

210h. — Destruction of exhibition by fire—Restoration by new company.]—The building in which a co. carried on the business of a waxworks exhibition was partially destroyed by fire in Mar. 1925. Most of the waxwork exhibits perished but the wine bar, workshop & administrative offices escaped, & the stock of moulds for making waxworks remained intact. Delay occurred in the settlement of the co.'s insurance claim & the directors did not come to a decision as to their subsequent policy until Dec. 1925, when they advertised the property for sale. In the meantime the co. retained the services of a number of its employees, including its entire technical staff & the latter were employed in restoring & replacing the exhibits damaged & destroyed by fire. By agreement in July, 1926, the old co. agreed to sell to certain purchasers the freehold site, the goodwill of the business, the contents of the exhibition & the benefit of all licences held by it. The purchasers agreed to form & register a new co. to take over the contract from the purchasers & to rebuild & restore the exhibition. The old co. agreed to continue the work of restoration of models & preservation of the premises. The new co. was duly incorporated in July, 1926, & took over the benefit of the previous agreement. In Aug. 1926, it entered into possession of the premises & took over the services of the old co.'s employees & technical staff. It forthwith commenced the erection of a new building & continued the work of restoring & replacing the exhibits. The new building was completed & opened to the public in Apr. 1928, the exhibition having been made to resemble as closely as possible the exhibition existing before the fire. On an appeal by the new co. against assessments to income tax, Sched. D, for the years 1928-29 & 1929-30, the Special Comrs. held that the new co. had succeeded to the business of the old co.:—Held: the Special Comrs.' decision was not wrong in law.—WILD v. MADAME TUSSAUD'S (1926), LTD. (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 127.

- 210j. — Succession to estate.—Applt. co., which was controlled in London, owned estates in India. By an agreement dated Mar. 28, 1928, it acquired from another co., as from Apr. 1, 1928, a rubber estate in India, together with plantations, nurseries, factories, plant, etc., & the benefit of contracts & engagements whether with coolies or others, but did not take over any book debts or the vendor co.'s selling organisation. The agreement was sanctioned by resolution of the vendor co. on Apr. 5, 1928. The vendor co., which retained all crops harvested & collected before Apr. 1, 1928, to fulfil certain forward contracts or for sale on the market, went into liquidation in July, 1928. Applt. co. was assessed to income tax under Sched. D. for the year 1928-29 in respect of its trading profits on the basis that it had succeeded, before Apr. 6, 1928, to the trade previously carried on by the vendor co., the vendor co.'s profits for the year to Mar. 31, 1928, being included in computing those profits. The co. appealed on the grounds: (a) that it had acquired the estate & nothing more, & there had been no succession to a trade, & (b) alternatively, that if there was a succession on or before Apr. 5, 1928, the assessment for 1928-29 was incorrect, since (i) the old rule 11 of Cases I. and II. of Sched. D. had been superseded as from Apr. 6, 1928, by sub-sects. (1) & (2) of sect. 32, Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), & (ii) the new rule 11 did not apply. It was admitted that if there was a succession the date thereof was before Apr. 6, 1928. The General Comrs. decided that applt. co. succeeded to the trade of the vendor co. & was assessable in respect of the vendor co.'s profits under rule 11 of Cases I. & II., Sched. D., & sect. 29, Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22):—Held: the Comrs. had evidence before them on which they could arrive at their conclusion that the co. had succeeded to the vendor co.'s trade, & the assessment for the year 1928-29 had been properly made.—MALAYALAM PLANTATIONS, LTD. v. CLARK (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 314.

- 210k. — Allowance for wear & tear.—Applt. co. was incorporated in 1930, the main object being to acquire the undertakings of & to amalgamate two steel cos. on the terms of a scheme sanctioned under order of ct. under the Cos. Act, 1929 (c. 23), ss. 153 & 154. The scheme was carried out & the undertakings & properties of the two component cos. were vested in applt. co. in return for shares, the two cos. being dissolved. The businesses of the two cos. had been carried on at a loss for several years before the amalgamation in 1930 & these businesses were afterwards carried on without interruption in the name of applt. co. For the years 1936-37 applt. co. claimed to set off against its assessment for income tax (a) the accumulated losses & (b) wear & tear allowances of the two component cos. for the years prior to the amalgamation in 1930, in accordance with rule 6 of the Rules applicable to Case I. of Sched. D of 1918 Act, notwithstanding rule 11 of the same rules as amended by Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 32:—Held: applt. co. was entitled to deduct the allowances for wear & tear, but not for losses, in respect of the component cos. during the years before the amalgamation. Rule 11 is a rule of computation only & does not affect rule 6, which is a rule of charge; as amended by Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 32, it was designed to alter the method of assessment in cases where there was a succession to a trade, profession or vocation, & not to take away the existing rights of the successor under rule 6.—*UNITED STEEL COS., LTD. v. - 210l. — Subsidiary companies—Taken over by retail company.—Up to Apr. 1, 1935, resp. co. owned two subsidiary cos. which carried on the business of manufacturing & the wholesale sale of boots & shoes, which resp. co. sold by retail in its shops. The subsidiary cos. sold the whole of their output to resp. co. On Apr. 1, 1935, the two subsidiary cos. were wound up, & thereafter resp. co. carried on the manufacture of boots & shoes in the works which had belonged to these cos. as departments of its business:—Held: the trade of the subsidiary cos. ceased on Apr. 1, 1935, to be carried on as a trade & became merged in the different business of resp. co. There was, therefore, no succession within Sched. D, Cases I. & II., r. 11 (2), to the trade of the subsidiary cos. by resp. co.—LAYCOCK v. FREEMAN, HARDY & WILLIS, LTD., [1938] 2 K. - 212. For existing para. & citation, read:—

A co. was incorporated in Jan. 1920, to take over the assets & business of a former cotton spinning co. The old co. had been very prosperous, its profits for the years 1912 to 1917 inclusive having averaged nearly £7,000 a year. For the three years 1918 to 1920 inclusive the average was about £22,000. The undertaking of the new co. proved unsuccessful, & for the year ending Feb. 26, 1921, it made a loss of £11,268. The co. having been assessed to income tax in respect of that year in the sum of £16,459, being £22,000 the average of the preceding three years less £6,000 depreciation, appealed, & contended that it was entitled to relief under the r. 11 of the rules applicable to Cases I. and II. of Sched. D. It appeared that in the latter half of 1919 & the first half of 1920 there was an extraordinary boom in the cotton trade & in trade generally in the United Kingdom, but this was followed, as the comrs. found, by a depression in the cotton trade since Jan. 1920, which was extraordinary & abnormal, & did not arise merely from the ordinary fluctuations in business the comrs. further found that the profits & gains of the co.'s business had fallen short since that date from some specific cause (the depression) within the meaning of r. 11:—Held: (1) the findings of the comrs. justified them in giving special relief provided by r. 11, inasmuch as the co. had fulfilled requirements of both limbs of the rule, namely, it had shown that it had succeeded to a business previously carried on, & had established by evidence, which was accepted by the comrs., that the depression was abnormal; (2) an ordinary fluctuation in trade is not a "specific cause" within the meaning of r. 11, but an abnormal & extraordinary depression if accepted & so found by the comrs. may be so.

Per SCRUTTON, L.J.: "Specific cause" in r. 11 in itself means a precisely stated definite cause as distinguished from a mere statement "I have lost profits, because I have made less money," or words to that effect.—*ELLIOTT v. 212a. ]—Held: in order to establish that there has been a falling short of the profits or gains of a trade within the exception to r. 11 of the Rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D., it has only to be shown that the profits or gains in the year of assessment have fallen short from some specific cause, & not that the aggregate profits or gains since the change have so fallen short; & if the profits or gains in the year of assessment are found to have fallen short from some specific cause, income tax is computed on the actual profits or gains of that year instead of on the average of the three preceding years.—*KNEESHAW v. Applt. co. was incorporated on Nov. 6, 1924, & became the exclusive agent of the Italian co., taking over the businesses of the two previous agent-cos. in circumstances which were held by the General Comrs. to constitute a succession within the meaning of r. 11 of the Rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D. The actual profits of applt. co. for the period from Nov. 6, 1924, to Apr. 5, 1925, & for the years ended Apr. 5, 1926, & Apr. 5, 1927, fell short of the combined average profits of the previous cos. & applt. co. contented, on appeal, that it was entitled to relief under r. 11. The specific causes alleged were (a) the re-imposition by Finance Act, 1925, of import duties upon motor cars & accessories, & (b) abnormal trade competition during the period from Nov. 6, 1924, to Apr. 5, 1927, arising from the adoption by British car manufacturers of mass production methods. The General Comrs. found that the cause of the falling short of applt. co.'s profits was competition in the motor car industry & held that that competition was not a specific cause within r. 11:—Held: the General Comrs.' decision was not wrong in law.—*FIAT (ENGLAND), LTD. v. income tax for the years 1923–24 & 1924–25 under Sched. The co. claimed that as it had paid in 1922 & 1923 two sums of £630,000 & £960,000 respectively under a lease dated Dec. 29, 1921, those sums ought to be allowed as deductions from the profits in the years of assessment. The co., under the terms of that lease, was in possession of a very large number of properties in different parts of the world used by it for the purposes of its trade & for which under the lease it had to pay £960,000 a year. The document of Dec. 29, 1921, was in the form of a strict lease, but contained a proviso that if the profits of the business of the co. after providing for the rent therein reserved, should be insufficient to enable the co. to pay interest on debenture stock & specific mtgs., the dividend on preference shares, & a dividend of 10 per cent. on ordinary shares, then the rent should be abated to the extent of the deficiency ascertained. The comrs. held that the payments of £630,000 & £960,000 were not payments antecedent

Where a deduction of an amount so fixed has been disallowed in part, & the evidence is not confined to proof of the resolution & payment thereunder, the question is whether the co. fully satisfied the onus under sects. 14 & 25 of showing that the assessment is excessive; in the present case that onus was not discharged.—*ASPRO, LTD. v. ss. Rent—Premises sub-let.—Resp. co. leased premises at an annual rent for a period of ten years from June, 1927 (with a break in the co.'s favour at the end of five years), & occupied them for the purposes of its business until Nov. 30, 1929, at which date it ceased to carry on any part of its business there. Portions of the premises were thereafter sub-let by the co. until June, 1932, when the lease was terminated under the right contained in the lease. The co. claimed a deduction in computing its profits assessable to income tax for the year 1931–32 of an amount representing the difference between the rent paid by it under the lease & the rents received by it from the sub-tenants. The General Comrs., on appeal, allowed the deduction :—Held : the co. was entitled to the deduction.—INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. FALKIRK IRON CO., LTD., [1933] S. C. 546; 17 Tax Cas. 625.—SCOT.

so. Duplicand payable for school playing fields.—Resp. co. was assessed under Sched. D. in respect of profits which it derived from carrying on business as proprietors of a school. The properties in which the school was carried on were owned by the co., & consisted (inter alia) of playing fields which, together with other lands owned by the co., were subject to an annual feu-duty payable to the superiors of the ground. The feu charter provided that, in addition to the annual feu-duty, a duplicand of feu-duty over the ground was payable by the co. at intervals of twenty-one years. The proportion of the feu-duty allocated to the playing fields amounted to £280 4s., & the co. claimed to deduct as a trading expense a payment of £560 8s., representing the corresponding duplicand which under the terms of the feu charter it had made to the ground superiors on Feb. 28, 1917 :—Held : the payment of the duplicand was made by the co. as a condition of the ownership of land & not as an expense of carrying on its business, & the payment in question was therefore not admissible as a deduction in arriving at the profits of the co. for the purpose of assessment under Case I. of Sched. D.—Dow v. MERCHANTON CASTLE SCHOOL, LTD., [1921] S. C. 853; 8 Tax Cas. 149.—SCOT.

sd. Construction of foreign railway—Payments under Convention.—Applt. co. was incorporated in the U.K. in 1889 with a registered office in London, & under a convention with the French Colonial Govt. constructed a railway in the French colony of P., making junction at the frontier of British India with the S. I. railway. By the convention applt. co. was to pay to the French Colonial Govt. half its net profits calculated as therein provided. In 1879 applt. co. entered into a work-reement with the S. I. Ry. Co. by that co. was to work the P.

railway as an integral part of its own line, & out of the receipts make certain payments to applt. co. in India in rupees. For each of the financial years 1925–26 & 1926–27 the S. I. Co. paid sums due under the agreement to their agent at T., who was also agent for applt. co. for certain purposes. Under instructions from applt. co. he calculated & paid to the French Colonial Govt. the sums due under the convention, & remitted the balance to applt. co. in London by a bank draft payable there :—Held : the sums paid by the S. I. Ry. Co. had been "received" in British India, namely, at T. by applt. co. within Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, s. 4 (1), & constituted the profits & gains of a "business" carried on by them within sect. 2 (4) & sect. 6 (iv) of the Act, so as to render them chargeable to tax in respect thereof; further, applt. co. was not entitled to deduct the payments made under the convention as being expenditure "incurred solely for the purpose of earning such profits or gains" within sect. 10 (2) (ix) of the Act; it was unnecessary to decide whether the profits accrued or arose in British India, or were deemed to do so, or whether the business was carried on in British India.—PONDICHERY RY. CO., LTD. v. INCOME TAX COMRS. (1931), 58 L. R. Ind. App. 239.—IND.

st. Dealer in trading stamps—Value of unredeemed stamps.—Applts. carried on business as dealers in trading stamps. The stamps were sold at a fixed rate to retail shopkeepers who distributed them to their customers with goods purchased. The customers were invited to collect the stamps in booklets & exchange for "redeem" them at any time for "gifts" offered by applts. by reference to the number of completed booklets presented for redemption. Applts. contended on appeal against assessments to income tax made upon them under Sched. D., that their profits in respect of stamps could only be ascertained on the exchange of the stamps for gifts, & that the value, i.e., the sale price, of all unredeemed stamps was properly treated as a liability & carried to reserve & should not be taken into account in computing their profits. The General Comrs. rejected applts.' contentions & disallowed a part of the reserve, which they considered to be excessive :—Held : the whole of the

to or necessary to earn profits, but contingent payments dependent on & payable only out of profits earned & were not allowable deductions from profits assessable to income tax:—Held: the real substance of the transaction was that in the events specified there should be a rebate of the rent, & whatever was the rent after the application of that rebate was still to be paid and it still remained an expense necessarily incurred in earning the trading profits of the co.—ADAMSON v. 217c. — Control of buildings essential to trade—Difference between rent & rent paid by sub-tenants.—To enable applt. co. to distribute its newspapers quickly unimpeded transport was essential in the street in which its printing works were situated. Applt. co. accordingly acquired certain property opposite its printing works & erected a building thereon. The building was then sold to a subsidiary co. at its cost price, & applt. co. took a lease of the whole building. Applt. co. used part of the ground floor, the basement, while unlet, & the front of the building, & the remainder it sublet or endeavoured to sublet. Applt. co. sought to deduct as an expense wholly & exclusively laid out for the purposes of its trade within Sched. D., Cases I. & II., r. 3 (a), the difference between the rent which it paid for the buildings & the rents which it received from sub-tenants:—Held: as the control of the building was essential for the purposes of applt. co.'s trade, applt. co. was entitled to make the deduction claimed.—ALLIED NEWSPAPERS, LTD. v. HINDSLEY, [1937] 2 All E. R. 663; 81 Sol. Jo. 569; affd. [1937] 4 All E. R. 677, C. A.

217d. — Value of tailings bought for extraction of gold.—A co. which was formed for the purpose acquired the right to take away & retreat very large dumps of residual deposits resulting from the working of a gold mine & called "tailings." These tailings were known to contain a certain amount of gold, & by a new process of treatment some of this gold was recovered & sold:—Held: as the tailings were raw material already won & gotten, the amount expended in acquiring them was in the nature of an expenditure on the raw material of the co.'s trade, & therefore that for the purpose of assessing the co.'s profits or gains the cost of the tailings treated during the period of assessment was a proper deduction from the proceeds realised by the sale of the gold extracted.—GOLDEN HORSE SHOE (NEW), LTD. v. THURGOOD, [1934] 1 K. B. 548; 103 L. J. K. B. 619; 160 L. T. 427; 18 Tax Cas. 280, C. A.

217e. — Payments in compromise of action.—(1) Payments properly made by a co. for the compromise of an action are proper deductions against profits. This is so though one of the items is a payment of £7,500 to one of the directors for the withdrawal of proceedings for alleged slander in connection with the co.'s business brought by him against a fellow-director.

217f. Excess profits duty—Holding company & subsidiary company.—The whole of the share capital of resp. co. was held by another co., which accordingly was assessed to & paid excess profits duty on the profits of the two cos. as though the subsidiary co. were a branch of the main co. In the computation of the main co.'s income tax liabilities on the three years' average basis, allowance for excess profits duty paid was made in the same manner as a deduction would be allowed for an ordinary outgoing in the course of trade. The main co. went into voluntary liquidation in 1918, liability to income tax ceasing before Apr. 6, 1918. In consequence of the operation of the average basis for income tax, the main co. had received effective benefit in respect of a part only of the excess profits duty paid. Resp. co. claimed deductions in the computation of its income tax liabilities for subsequent years in respect of the excess profits duty paid, for which allowance had not effectively been given to the main co., in so far as such duty was attributable to its own profits. The General Comrs. on appeal allowed the claim & the Crown appealed:—Held: the co. was not entitled to any deduction.—OGSTON v. REYNOLDS, SONS & CO., LTD., REYNOLDS, SONS & CO., LTD. v. aa. Payment to company in order to acquire operation & control.—Applt. co. carried on in India the business of communication by wireless & another co. carried on the business & undertaking in India of communication by cable. By an agreement entered into in Feb. 1932 by the two cos., the future operation & control of both businesses were to be conducted until Dec. 1944 by applt. co. As consideration applt. co. was to pay to the other co. (a) £90,000 payable by four equal quarterly payments in each year, & (b) one-half of the net profits of applt. co. for each of its financial years, payable as to 80 per cent. by such payments on account from time to time as the directors of applt. co. should consider justifiable, & as to the balance within 14 days after applt. co.'s accounts should have been adopted by the shareholders at their annual general meeting. "Net profits" meant the profits for each year remaining after deducting from the gross revenue of applt. co. all ordinary expenses properly chargeable to revenue & depreciation, but before making any allowance for income tax & before placing any sum to reserve:—Held: the half share of the net profits payable under the agreement was not a proper deduction to be allowed in computing the profits of applt. co. for the purposes of income tax & super tax under the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922.—INDIAN RADIO & CABLE COMMUNICATIONS CO., LTD. v. agreements made in 1921 & 1924 between the predecessors & a railway co. The agreements in question provided for the construction of siding accommodation at the quarries. The cost of construction was borne by the firm, & the railway co. agreed to allow to the firm at half-yearly intervals, as from Sept. 30, 1924, sums equal to 10 per cent. of the railway co.'s share of the receipts in respect of traffic conveyed to or from the siding, until the expiration of ten years from Sept. 30, 1924, or until the total amounts allowed to the firm should be equal to specified amounts expended by the firm in connection with the siding construction. Resp. co. received from the railway co. in the years 1927 & 1928 allowances calculated by reference to the terms of the agreement. The co. claimed that these allowances were repayments of capital sums expended & that the railway charges, before deduction of these allowances, were business expenses & admissible deductions in computing its profits for income tax purposes:—Held: in computing its profits for income tax purposes the co. was entitled to deduct only the difference between the railway traffic charges & the allowances granted in respect of those charges.—*WESTCOMBE v. 222a. Company.—Payment to director as inducement to retire.—Held: a payment by a co. to a director in order to induce him to retire, in circumstances in which the other directors had come to the conclusion that it was essential in the interests of the co. that he should retire, was a business expense deductible from the co.'s profits for purposes of income tax.—*MITCHELL v. 222b. Payment to director as compensation for loss of office.—The directors & sole shareholders of resp. co. sold all their shares, including their qualification shares, to a purchasing co. under the terms of an agreement which provided (inter alia) that a balance-sheet & profit & loss account should be taken as at the date of sale. In pursuance of this agreement a profit & loss account was taken which showed an amount of £5,928 standing as a profit. By a resolution of resp. co. it was resolved that that sum should be paid to the retiring directors, as to £2,928 thereof as "remuneration" & as to £3,000 as "compensation for loss of office," & these sums were duly paid:—Held: resp. co. were not entitled to deduct the sum of £3,000 from their assessment under Sched. D as "money laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade" within r. 3 of the Rules to Cases I. & II., of Sched. D.—OVERY v. ASHFORD, DUNN & CO., LTD. (1933), 49 T. L. Part of these contributions was applied by the association as a contribution to the Conciliation Board, & part was contributed to the funds of the Mining Association of Great Britain, which in some matters looked after the interests of coal-owners. Appls. claimed that their subscriptions to the assocn. were proper deductions in arriving at their profits:—Held: appls. were not entitled to deduct that part of their subscriptions which was applied towards an indemnity against loss of output by reason of strikes & to the funds of the Mining Assocn., but they were entitled to deduct the part which was applied as a contribution to the Conciliation Board.—*THOMAS MERTHYR COLLIERY CO., LTD. v. 224a. — Applt. co. was a member of the Cold Rolled Brass & Copper Assocn., an unincorporated body having as its objects the fixing of prices for goods manufactured by its members, & the provision of a common fund to be applied in the interests of its members. The common fund consisted of members' entrance fees & monthly payments proportional to output tonnage, & in the event of the Association being wound up was distributable between the members in proportion to their contributions. In 1918 the Ministry of Munitions had large surplus stocks of brass & copper & the Assocn. was specially authorised by its members to negotiate with the Ministry in regard to its disposal. As a result the Assocn. contracted to purchase the metal from the Ministry at fixed prices per ton, & this contract, & also the draft arrangement for the disposal of the metal to the Assocn.'s members, were subsequently approved by the Assocn. in general meeting. By these arrangements members were given, firstly, an option of purchasing a quantity of the metal proportional to their monthly output, at prices scheduled by the Association varying according to quality & size, & secondly, an option to apply for any residue. The whole of the metal was thus disposed of by the Association at prices higher than those paid to the Ministry, & the "profit" was carried to the common fund. Appls. debited in their accounts the full cost of the metal purchased by them from the Assocn., & did not bring into the accounts their share in the "profit." They were assessed to income tax under Case I. of Sched. D. on the basis that they were entitled to deduct only the net cost of the metal, i.e. the full cost less their share in the "profit":—Held: appls. were able to share in the distribution of the metal only on payment of the prices scheduled by the Assocn.; their share in the "profit" was in proportion, not to the price paid, but to the quantity taken; the profit carried to the common fund could not be regarded as the individual members' profit; & in the circumstances appls. were entitled to deduct as a business expense the price paid by them to the Assocn.—CLIFFORD & SON, LTD. v. PUTTICK, CLIFFORD & SON, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1928), 14 Tax Cas. 189.

224b. Subscription to guarantee fund of British Empire Exhibition.—Applts., asphalters, subscribed to the guarantee fund of the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, solely, as the General Comrs. found, in the hope of obtaining preferential treatment in the allocation of contracts for asphalt work within the exhibition grounds. They did not in fact obtain any contract at all from the exhibition authorities. Having been called upon to pay a considerable part of the amount guaranteed they sought to deduct the sum so paid from their profits assessable to income tax as a trade expense. The General Comrs. held it was an allowable deduction:—Held: the question was one of fact, & as there was evidence to support the finding of the General Comrs., their decision must be affirmed.—*MORLEY v. 224c. Subscription to hospital—Where employee treated.—Applts., who gave considerable subscriptions to a hospital at which their employees were frequently treated, claimed to deduct the amount of the subscriptions as a trade expense under r. 3 (a) of the rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D.:—Held: the question whether the subscriptions were given with the view of obtaining a staff that would earn profits, or whether they were given merely because the staff had in fact been treated at the hospital, was a question of fact for the Special Comrs., & their decision must be affirmed.—*BOURNE & HOLLINGSWORTH, LTD. v. Percentage of net profits payable to another company for benefit of experience.—By an agreement dated May 18, 1926, a co., which was carrying on business as manufacturers of beet sugar, agreed to pay to two bodies in each of four years for division between them as they mutually agreed "20 per cent. of the net profits of the co. in consideration of their giving to the co. the full benefit of their technical & financial knowledge & experience & giving to the co. & its directors advice to the best of their ability respectively on all questions relating to manufacture & finance & disposal of the co.'s products":—Held: in ascertaining the profits or gains of the co. for any year assessable to income tax under Sched. D of 1918 Act, the sum payable to the two bodies under this agreement out of the earnings of the co. should be allowed as a deduction as being money wholly or exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade "within rule 3 (a) of the Rules applicable to Cases I. & II.

Semle: where an assessment has been made for purposes of income tax under Sched. D of 1918 Act, with full knowledge of the facts, & a certain deduction has been allowed in assessing the profits or gains, the mere fact that the Surveyor of Taxes afterwards changes his opinion as to the deduction having been properly allowed is not a ground for making an additional assessment under sect. 125 of 1918 Act.—BRITISH SUGAR MANUFACTURERS, LTD. v. HARRIS, [1938] 2 K. B. 220; [1938] 1 All E. R. 149; 107 L. J. K. B. 472; 159 L. T. 305; 82 Sol. Jo. 75; 21 Tax Cas. 528, C. A.

225a. Annual payment for goodwill.—Resp. co. acquired by assignment, in Jan. 1928, the rights of the assignor under (a) an underlease by which he became lessee of premises used as a cinema hall, together with the use of fixtures, fittings & furniture at a yearly rent, & (b) a deed supplemental to the underlease, by which he was granted the goodwill of the cinema business carried on at these premises subject to a payment of £500 per annum. The deed, which was to run concurrently with the underlease, i.e., for thirteen years, & was to cease if the underlease was terminated, included an option for the purchase of the head lease of the premises & the goodwill for £3,500. On appeal against assessments to income tax, Sched. D., for the years 1927–28, 1928–29 & 1929–30, resp. co. claimed a deduction in computing its assessable profits in respect of the payment of £500 per annum under the deed. The Crown contended that the payment was a capital payment, or an annual payment the deduction of which was prohibited by rule 3 (l), Cases I. & II., Sched. D. The Special Comrs. decided that the payment was not payment of a capital sum or a distribution of profits made by way of an annual payment but a necessary revenue expense of the co.:—Held: the payment under the deed was an admissible deduction in computing resp. co.'s liability.—*OGDEN v. 226a. Liability to bank on loans to meet acceptances—Subsequent compromise of bank's claim.—Applt., who carried on business as an exporter of cloth, habitually financed his shipments by drawing bills on the buyer in Shanghai & borrowing from a bank in London on the security of the bills & shipping documents. In 1920 a buyer became unable to meet his acceptances, & applt. found himself responsible to the bank for a large sum. In computing his assessable profits for the year ended Mar. 31, 1921, he was allowed to deduct a sum of £22,410, being the estimated amount of the bank's claim against him, but subsequently he advanced certain contentions against the bank & eventually, at the end of 1922, the bank accepted £8,000 in settlement of its claim. Applt. objected to additional assessments made in order to bring into charge the difference between the £8,000 & the £22,410 previously allowed, contending that the sums advanced by the bank were a liability for the year ended Mar. 31, 1921, & that the subsequent reduction of the debt was immaterial in determining his liability for that or any later year:—Held: applt.'s transactions with the bank constituted part of his business & that the loss incurred was a trading loss; & the computations for the purposes of income tax must be reopened & adjusted by reference to the actual amount of this loss.—BERNHARD v. GAHAN, BERNHARD v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1928), 13 Tax Cas. 723, C. A.

Both in 1927 & 1928 the co. were, for the purposes of Sched. A, allowed to deduct the sum of £1,752 paid by them in respect of owner's rates from their assessment of £5,976, & in making their return for Sched. D they claimed to be allowed to deduct the £5,976 as the annual value of the premises & also the £1,752 as disbursement of money wholly & exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of the trade:—Held: the owner's rates payable by a trader who owns the premises in which he conducts his trade are not a permissible deduction in the computation of his profits & gains for the purpose of assessment under Sched. 228b. — Factory & dining hall assessed as one unit.—A block of buildings, known as the dining block, & containing dining-rooms, kitchens, dressing & changing rooms, etc., was erected by the applt. co. & connected with their factory by bridges & covered ways. The annual value of the whole of the premises was assessed under Sched. A as one unit of assessment. In computing the deduction to be allowed to applt. co. from its trading profits in respect of the dining block as being a hereditament used for the purpose of the co.'s trade, the revenue authorities had treated the dining block as not being a mill or factory, or similar to a mill or factory, & therefore as not qualifying for the larger deduction allowed by the proviso to r. 5 (2) of Rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D. On appeal by the co.:—Held: the factory, together with the dining block, must be treated as the unit of assessment, & there could be no splitting up or apportionment in respect of the dining block. The word "premises" in the proviso to r. 5 (2) means "the assessable unit."—CADBURY BROS., LTD. v. SINCLAIR, [1934] 2 K. B. 389; 102 L. J. K. B. 468; 148 L. T. 478; 49 T. L. R. 208; 77 Sol. 228c. — Statutory exemption of lands from taxation.—Lands at K. leased to applts. on which they had erected a factory where they carried on their business, were, by a statute of Car. 2, exempt at all times thereafter from the payment of all taxes whatsoever thereafter to be imposed thereon, notwithstanding any statute law to the contrary. Having regard to the provisions of that statute no assessment had been made on the lands under Sched. A, but a deduction equivalent to the annual value of such lands had been allowed in computing the profits of the business carried on thereon for the purposes of Sched. D. After the passing of Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), amending the 1918 Act, the revenue authorities disallowed any such deduction:—Held: applts. were still entitled to make the deduction of the annual value of the lands from the computation of the profits of their business for the purposes of Sched. D, notwithstanding the amendments by Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), made to 1918 Act, as, if the privilege of making any such deduction were withdrawn, the sum on which the co. would have to pay tax would be larger, & thereby taxation would be imposed contrary to the express provisions of the statute of Car. 2. Though the ct. allowed the appeal on that ground which, though raised before FINLAY, J., had not been referred to in his judgment, the ct. refrained from expressing any opinion as to the correctness of the decision of FINLAY, J., upon the points which formed the ground of his decision.—CADBURY BROS., LTD. v. 230 iv. —.—The profits earned by that part of applt. co.'s ry. undertaking which was operated in the Bechuanaland Protectorate were liable to income tax in the Protectorate. Owing to the generally worn state of the track applts. completely relaid 33½ miles of track, the new line being of the same weight as the old line. On a further 40½ miles of the track the old rails were relaid, but new sleepers were put in—steel sleepers for 38½ miles & wooden sleepers for 2 miles. In their accounts for the year to Sept. 30, 1930, applts. debited a sum of £252,174 as "renewals of permanent way." The income tax collector of the Protectorate disallowed that deduction, & his decision was upheld by the Special Ct. of the Protectorate. On appeal:—Held: the expenditure was an outgoing "not of a capital nature" within Bechuanaland Protectorate Income Tax Proclamation, 1922, s. 15 (1) (a), & was "expended for the repairs of property occupied for the purpose of trade or in respect of which income is receivable" within sect. 15 (1) (b) of the Proclamation, & was, therefore, under the sect. an allowable deduction for income tax purposes.—RHODESIA RAILWAYS, LTD. v. An assessment was made for the year 1931-32 in the sum of £142, against which the inspector of taxes was prepared to agree to a set-off under Finance Act, 1926 (c. 22), s. 33, of £37.

Resp. claimed that under sect. 33 he was entitled to set the losses of £61 & £37, total £98, which he contended were "computed in like manner as profits & gains under the Rules applicable to Cases I. & II. of Sched. D. against the assessment of £142. The General Comrs. allowed the claim & reduced the 1931-32 assessment to £44 (£142 less £98).—Held: the relief granted by sect. 33 extended only to the actual loss sustained which, as computed, was £61, & that relief having been effectively given in 1930-31 to the extent of £24, the amount to be set-off against the 1931-32 assessment was the balance only of £37.—INLAND REVENUE v. 244b. Payments to lessor by lessee of hotel—In respect of structural improvements.—Resp. was the lessee of a hotel &, in accordance with the terms of his lease as varied by supplemental agreements, paid to the lessor (inter alia) (a) a yearly occupation rent, & (b) "by way of rent," equal half-yearly sums, being "mixed instalments of capital & interest" in repayment of sums expended by the lessor on structural improvements to the hotel. The net Sched. A. assessment on the property was greater than the occupation rent but considerably less than the aggregate annual sums paid by the lessee. On appeal against assessments to income tax under Sched. D. in respect of his profits as a hotel keeper, resp. claimed that the total annual payments were rent for the use & occupation of the hotel & accordingly an admissible deduction in computing his profits. The Crown contended that the deduction must be limited to the net annual value of the hotel for Sched. A. purposes. The General Comrs. allowed the appeal:—Held: the half-yearly payments by resp. to the lessor in respect of the improvements were capital payments & accordingly inadmissible deductions in computing resp.'s liability under Case I of Sched. The trader having had to pay interest on that lost capital in 1924–25, the year of assessment, claimed deduction therefor from the assessable profits of his remaining banking business for the year 1924–25:—Held: though the branches were distinct, the trade was one, & though the lost capital was not available for use in the trade, viz. the banking business, in the year of assessment, the interest paid on it should be deducted under Indian Income Tax Act, s. 10 (2) (iii).—*ARUNACHALAM CHETTY v. In the exercise of its option, the co. paid the lessor a sum of £6,104, as representing the value of the damaged lands:—Held:

such payment was in the nature of capital expenditure, & was not therefore a proper deduction in computing the co.'s liability to income tax.—ADDIE (ROBERT) & SONS' COLLIERIES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., [1924] S. C. 231; 8 Tax Cas. 671.—SCOT.

The corpn. had no power to pay any compensation by way of pensions or otherwise to these men, so they promoted a Private Bill to authorise them to do so. In computing the liability to income tax of the corpn. for the year in which the Bill was promoted, the Comrs. were of opinion that the cost of promoting the Bill was not in the nature of capital expenditure but was a proper debit item to be set against the incomings of the undertaking; that it was a necessary trading expense incurred in the course of carrying on the undertaking:—Held: the cost of promoting the Bill was an admissible deduction.—*MCGARRY v. so. Costs of settling copyright action.—A broadcasting co. whose income was derived from license fees paid by the owners of wireless receivers, to earn that income had to provide a programme, including musical items. The co. was threatened with an action for the infringement of copyright in connection with its broadcasting certain items, & it was necessary to satisfy the claims of the owners of the copyright. A compromise was reached, by which terms of payment for the use of the copyright items were fixed:—Held: the costs of negotiating the settlement was a revenue expenditure, necessary to enable the co. to carry on its business & earn its income, & was a fair charge against the income of the assessable year. The expressions "outgoings," "expenses" & "capital" must be understood in the sense in which they are accepted by practical men of affairs, according to the nature of the particular business & the circumstances of the particular case.—*CENTRAL BROADCASTERS, LTD. v. sq. Sum paid as compensation for termination of agency agreement.—A firm of manufacturers' agents held for many years an agreement constituting them the sole selling agents in Scotland of an English co. In terms of the agreement the firm were entitled to receive a percentage on the value of

In 1916 the business was closed down, & the lessor agreed to accept a surrender of the lease in consideration of a sum to be paid by instalments of £250 a year, & resps. issued a debenture to the lessor securing the instalments by a floating charge on all their assets. In 1921 the lessor accepted £600 from resps. in satisfaction of all further liability under the debenture:—Held: the payment of £600 was not an admissible deduction.—Cowcher v. Mills & Co., Ltd. (1927), 13 Tax Cas. 216.

248c. Payment in respect of indemnity against liability for surface damage.—In each of these cases the co. carried on the business of colliery proprietor. Each co. had taken certain leases of coal seams, under which, in consideration of covenants by the lessors indemnifying the co. against liability for surface damage, the co. undertook to make payments to the lessors on specified accounting dates in respect of each acre or part of an acre beneath which coal had first been worked since the previous accounting date. Under all but one of these leases a payment in respect of a particular acre covered all liability in respect of subsequent workings beneath that acre; under the remaining lease separate payments, up to a maximum of four, were required to be made on the first working of each seam beneath a particular acre. The cos. contended that the payments to the lessors under the surface damage provisions of these leases were admissible deductions in computing profits for income tax purposes. The co. in the first case replaced a chimney which had become unsafe by a new chimney, erected on an adjacent site, which was admitted to be an improvement on the old one. No allowance under Finance Act, 1919 (c. 32), s. 18 (2), or of wear & tear, in respect of the old chimney, had ever been given. The co. claimed as a deduction in computing its profits for income tax purposes that part of the cost of the new chimney which was charged in its accounts for the year forming the basis period for the 1930-31 assessment. The Special Comrs. on appeal held that the sum paid by the cos. to the lessors in consideration for the indemnities against liability for surface damage were of the nature of recurring business expenditure & constituted necessary working expenditure, & allowed the sums as deductions. They also held that the replacement of the chimney was a replacement of a capital nature, & that no part of the expenditure upon it could be allowed:—Held: the Special Comrs.' decisions were correct.—O'Grady v. Bullcroft Main Collieries, Ltd., O'Grady v. Markham Main Colliery, Ltd. (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 93.

all orders received from Scotland, the minimum sum payable to them annually being fixed at £2,000. The agreement was more than once renewed, & in Sept. 1932, it was continued for three years from Sept. 30, 1932. During the later years of the agreement the firm held about eleven agencies for various manufacturers, & their gross receipts averaged about £4,000 annually, including the fixed minimum payment of £2,000 from the English co.

In 1934, at the request of the English co., it was agreed that the agency agreement should be terminated on Sept. 30, 1934, being one year prior to its natural expiry. The English co. paid the firm the sum of £1,500 as compensation for the termination of their agreement before its natural expiry. The firm contended that this sum of £1,500 was not chargeable to income tax, on the ground that it was a capital payment made as compensa-

248d. Purchase of oil wells.—Resp. co. which carried on the business of oil producing & refining had for many years bought oil from an Indian oil co. By agreement, in 1928, the oil co. agreed to sell to resp. co. (a) its plant, equipment, casing, tanks, pipe-lines, etc., & (b) all oil won on & after Oct. 1, 1928, from its existing wells. The expressed consideration for the unwon oil was £70,000, which was stated to have been calculated by reference to the estimated production of the wells. The consideration was satisfied by the issue to the oil co. of shares in resp. co. A sum of £70,000 was placed to "Crude Oil Suspense Account" in the books of the resp. co. to represent the oil purchased, & as oil was produced, a sum equal to two rupees per barrel was transferred from that account to the co.'s revenue account to represent the actual purchase of oil. At July 31, 1929, £19,896 had been so transferred. Resp. co. contended that in principle the sum of £70,000 was an admissible deduction in computing its profits for income tax purposes & claimed a deduction in computing its profits for the year ended July 31, 1929, of the sum of £19,896, representing, as it contended, the cost of stock actually purchased in that year:—Held: the £70,000 was a capital expenditure & no part of it was admissible as a deduction.—Hughes v. British Burmah Petroleum Co., Ltd. (1932), 17 Tax Cas. 286.

249a. Payment to agent to terminate agency.—The Anglo-Persian Oil Co. paid to its agents in Persia the sum of £300,000, in compensation for the latter relinquishing a contract of agency. The co. treated that sum in its books as a payment out of revenue, & charged instalments of £60,000 to revenue account during each of the following five years. The Crown claimed that these were not permissible deductions, but should be placed to capital account:—Held: (1) the question was not entirely one of fact, on which the decision of the comrs. was binding, for questions as to what are, or are not, permissible deductions turn upon certain defined principles of law, as laid down by Lord Cave in British Insulated & Helsby Cables, Ltd. v. Atherton, No. 264; (2) in making the payment the co. was not enlarging its operations, nor improving its goodwill. It was not, within the meaning of Lord Cave in Atherton's Case, "bringing into existence an asset or an advantage for the enduring benefit of its trade." The tion for the disorganisation of the structure of their business:—Held: the sum was chargeable to income tax, in respect that it was really paid as compensation for loss of profits during the last year of the agency agreement.

249b. Payment to terminate pooling agreement.—

An English co. with an issued share capital of £3,575,000, carried on a very extensive business as manufacturers of margarine & other substitutes for butter. Their articles of assocn. empowered them to act in many subsidiary capacities such as those of importers, dealers, cattle breeders, crushers & merchants of seeds, shipowners, warehousemen & others; & also to enter into trading arrangements with persons engaged in any enterprises which the co. was authorised to carry on. Their principal trade rivals in the manufacture of margarine were a Dutch co. In Feb. 1908, these two cos. entered into an agreement to share profits & losses in the proportion which, on an average of five years, the profits of the rival tradings in margarine bore to each other. In July, 1913, the former agreement was extended so as to include profits & losses in connection with the acquisition & exercise of certain patent rights granted for a process of hardening oils &, with this extension, was prolonged until the end of 1940. Each co. carried on its business independently & acted on the two agreements until the end of 1913. During the War the agreements could not be observed on either side. In Oct. 1920, a third agreement was entered into by which the former agreements were amended, & it was agreed that, as amended, they should continue in force until the end of 1940. In particular it was agreed that the results of trading in the year 1914 & later years should be ascertained by accountants on each side, & that any dispute arising under the agreements should be settled by arbn. Disputes arose & became the subject of an arbn. of such complexity & duration that the cos. came to terms by which the agreements were rescinded & the Dutch co. paid the English co. a sum of £450,000 "as damages"; but the parties did not specify the cause of action in respect of which the damages were paid.—Held: this sum was in the nature of a capital asset & not an income receipt to be included in computing the profits of trade of the English co.—VAN DEN BERGHS, LTD. v. CLARK, [1935] A. C. 431; 104 L. J. K. B. 345; 153 L. T. 171; 51 T. L. R. 393; 19 Tax Cas. 390, H. L.

250a. Loss of subsidiary company written off trading account.—Applt. co. had a number of wholly controlled subsidiaries for which it did printing work. One of these cos., C. F., Ltd., during the year 1933–34 made a loss upon its trading operations of £2,927. The charge for printing during that year was £10,118, & applt. co. wrote off £2,927 from that sum & contended that that sum of £2,297 was a proper deduction against profits. The Crown contended that the sum of £2,927 had no specific relation to the sum of £10,117 & that it was in fact capital put into the subsidiary co. to support it:—Held: the sum of £2,927 was capital put into the subsidiary co. to support it, & was not wholly laid out for the purpose of applt. co.'s trade. It fell, therefore, with the prohibitions of Sched. D, Cases I. & II., r. 3 (a), (e), (f), (i).—ODHAMS PRESS, LTD. v. COOK, [1938] 2 All E. R. 312; affd. [1938] 4 All E. R. 545, C. A.

252a. Difference between cost & proceeds of sale of fixtures of branch shops.—A trading co., with a number of branch shops controlled by a head office, followed a policy of opening & closing their branches in accordance with the local demands & the probabilities of profit or loss:—Held: the difference between the cost of new fixtures, fittings, & utensils for the new shops, & the receipts from the sales of equivalent second hand fixtures, etc., from the shops that were closed, was a capital expenditure, & was not a revenue expenditure which could be debited to the trading account of the co. in ascertaining the profits which were assessable to income tax.—EASTMANS, LTD. v. SHAW, EASTMANS, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. (1928), 45 T. L. R. 12; 72 Sol. Jo. 744; 14 Tax Cas. 218, H. L.

252b. Finance company advancing money for hire-purchase contracts—Interest on advances from another finance company.—Applt. co. was incorporated for the purpose of carrying on the business of finance in all its branches with a capital of £1,000, of which £904 was paid up, £900 of the capital being held by an American finance co. Its main business was the advancing of money for the acquisition of motor cars on the hire-purchase system. The co. bought the car in the first instance. The customer paid a deposit & entered into an agreement to hire the car from the co., paying instalments which, in the aggregate, amounted to the balance of the purchase-money plus an additional sum which represented the co.'s gross profit on the transaction. In order to finance the earlier transactions of applt. co., the American co. advanced an initial sum upon which interest was payable at a fixed rate per cent. per annum; as to this interest, no question arose. Further advances were made by the American co., as & when required, to finance fresh hire-purchase transactions & interest on these advances was paid by reference to the amounts outstanding from day to day at rates fluctuating with the American bank rate. The advances were repaid from an account into which customers' instalments were paid. Applt. co. claimed that the interest on the additional advances was an admissible deduction in computing its profits for income tax purposes. The General Comrs., on appeal, refused the deduction, holding that the moneys advanced by the American co. were moneys employed or intended to be employed as capital in the trade:—Held: there was evidence upon which the Comrs. could arrive at their conclusion of fact & they had not misdirected themselves in law.—EUROPEAN INVESTMENT TRUST CO., LTD. v. JACKSON (1932), 18 Tax Cas. 1.

252c. Note issue.—In 1925 resp. co., whose trade consists wholly of selling in the United Kingdom (for sterling) petroleum products purchased in America for dollars, had the opportunity of acquiring control of another co.'s business by the purchase of shares for $7,000,000 payable in dollars in New York. Being short of capital it arranged with New York bankers for the issue in New York of $8,000,000 one year Gold Notes dated July 15, 1925, & payable on July 15, 1926, to pay for these shares & for the general purposes of its business. The bankers purchased the Notes for re-sale but did not actually pay the co. until July 20, 1925. In July, 1926, the co. having insufficient resources to finance fresh business & to repay the $8,000,000 Notes due on July 15, 1926, arranged with the bankers for the issue of $6,000,000 Gold Notes from July 1, 1926, in three series, the first series of $2,000,000 being payable on July 1, 1927, & the other two (with which the appeal was not concerned) at later dates. The 1926 Note issue was not a renewal of a part of the 1925 loan but an entirely separate & distinct transaction. Each of the Notes in question bore coupons for a full year's interest to be paid in half-yearly instalments. Both principal & interest were payable at the bankers' office in New York in gold coin of the United States. The co. undertook to pay all expenses of preparation, issue & delivery of the Notes. On appeal against assessments under Sched. D., the co. contended that the 1925 Gold Notes & the first series of the 1926 Gold Notes were temporary loans, & that the interest thereon was not annual interest & was (together with the expenses of issue of the Notes & the amount of the exchange adjustments) an admissible deduction in computing its assessable profits:—Held: the interest on the Notes in question was annual interest; it was payable on money employed or intended to be employed as capital in the co.'s business, & the interest, the expenses of issue of the Notes & the amount of the exchange adjustments were not admissible deductions in arriving at the co.'s profits.—*WARD v. In consideration of the licence & of the anticipated user of the invention defts. agreed to pay to pltfs. £3,000, £1,000 down & the remainder by instalments. In discharge of one instalment defts. paid £387 10s., being £500 less income tax at the current rate. Pltfs. contended that the sum of £500 was not income of pltfs. from which any income tax was lawfully deductible, but was an instalment of a capital sum & accordingly was capital:—Held: defts. were not entitled to deduct the income tax because the instalment of £500 was not by way of income, but was a capital sum.—*DESOUTTER BROS., LTD. v. 252g. Payment in respect of future rents.—Applt. co. having acquired a racing track & equipped it for greyhound racing, fell into financial difficulties, & the debenture holders appointed a receiver. The latter hired the track to another co., at first for yearly periods, & then for the period from May 1, 1932, to Apr. 29, 1941. In Mar. 1934, the second co. desiring to go into voluntary liquidation, it became necessary to ascertain its liabilities, & the receiver was approached to fix a sum for which he would accept a full surrender of the hiring agreement. It was eventually agreed that a full surrender would be accepted on a payment of £15,640. That payment was included in the revenue account of applt. co.:—Held: the payment was a payment in respect of future rents & was to be treated as income & not as capital. The agreement for hiring the track was not an agreement which related to the whole structure of applt. co.'s business, & did not prevent it from acquiring other capital assets or from carrying on its business in connection with such assets in any manner it pleased.—*GREYHOUND RACING ASSOCN. The Association, in order to secure the success of its object, purchased the undertaking of a co. which was a member of the Association in order to close it down & prevent its being acquired by persons outside the Association. It also made a grant to one of its members to enable that member to acquire a controlling interest in an outside competing business & bring its operations within the rules of the Association. The taxpayer sought to deduct from his trading profits for the purpose of income tax assessment his share of the Association's expenses in each instance:—Held: in each instance the payment made by the Association had created for the members of the Association advantages of an enduring nature properly to be treated as capital, & in neither case was the deduction which was claimed allowable.—*COLLINS v. 254a. Nature of estimate to be made.]—Applts. were assessed under Sched. D. for the years 1921–22 & 1922–23 on the basis of a writing down in two years successively of a doubtful debt. That was done by agreement with the inspector of taxes, who had all the facts before him. Subsequently, by additional first assessments, the writing down of the doubtful debt was disallowed, on the ground that since the writing down of the debt was allowed, it has come to the surveyor's knowledge that applts. had permitted the debtors to increase their indebtedness to them. On an appeal against the additional first assessments, the General Comrs. were not satisfied that the debt or any part of its had been proved to be a bad debt within the meaning of r. 3 (i) of Cases I. & II. of Sched. D., & they confirmed the additional first assessments:—Held: (1) the General Comrs. had not considered the right question. The question which they ought to have considered & decided was whether there had been a "discovery" by the surveyor within sect. 125 of 1918 Act. If they had considered that question there was no evidence which would have supported a decision in favour of the inspector of taxes. The word "discovers" does not mean a mere change of opinion on the same facts & figures. To justify an additional assessment the surveyor must ascertain some new fact which, if it had been known when the original assessment was made, would have resulted in an increased assessment; (2) an estimate of the value of a debt made in 1923 & 1924 on the then facts & probabilities was not overthrown by a finding of the General Comrs. that in 1930 it had not been proved that the debt or any part of it was a bad debt within the meaning of the rule. What the statute requires is an estimate of the extent to which a debt is bad for a profit & loss account. Such an estimate is not a prophecy to be judged by after events, but a valuation of the debt as an asset, to be judged as an estimate on the existing facts & probabilities.—*ANDERTON & HALSTEAD, LTD. v. Whether for the purposes of income tax a debt is wholly or partly & to what extent bad or irrecoverable is in every case, whether the debtor is an individual or a joint stock co. or other entity, a question of fact to be decided on a consideration of the relevant facts of the particular case, & there is no justification, on any principle or authority, for holding that a debt due from a limited co. which is still a going concern is incapable of being treated as a bad debt.—*DINSHAW v. It was subsequently ascertained that no commission was due for that year, & the commission account showed a balance due by him to the co. of £3,391. In arriving at its profits for income tax purposes the co. claimed to be entitled to deduct this loss:—Held: the loss was a "loss not connected with or arising out of the sn. Sums payable as compensation for delay in implementing agreement.]—The Renfrew Town Council & the Clyde Navigation Trustees made an agreement in 1925 whereby the council, to whom the trustees were then under obligation to construct a quay at Renfrew in or before 1926, agreed to the construction of the quay being delayed on the terms that as full compensation for the delay the trustees should (inter alia) pay to the council a specified annual sum until the construction of the quay was completed. The payments made by the trustees under this agreement were allowed as deductions in computing their trading profits for income tax purposes & were made without deduction of tax. Assessments to income tax, Sched. D., were made on the council on the sums received from the trustees. On appeal the council contended that these sums were not annuities or other annual payments & were not income chargeable to income tax, but were damages or compensation for breach of agreement resulting in a loss to the council of rateable value; alternatively, that even if they were annuities or other annual payments, they had been paid wholly out of profits & gains brought into charge to tax so that assessments on the council were precluded by General Rule 19. The Special Comrs. confirmed the assessments:—Held: (a) the sums in question were annual payments & were income chargeable to income tax in the hands of the council; and (b) they were not paid or wholly payable out of profits or gains brought into charge & were properly assessable upon the council.—*RENFREW TOWN COUNCIL v. new fund capable of approval.]—By an agreement in 1921, in pursuance of an agreement made on the formation of resp. co. & in exercise of powers in its Memorandum of Asscn., it was provided that a number of its ordinary shares should be set aside to form the nucleus of a benefit fund for its own employees & those of associated cos. The shares were duly allotted to trustees, & a deed between the co. & the trustees, setting out the trusts on which the fund was to be held, was executed in 1923; it provided that the co. might by instrument in writing under its common seal revoke or alter any of the trusts & might declare new trusts. The benefit fund was not capable of approval by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue as a "superannuation fund" within Finance Act, 1921 (c. 32), s. 32. In 1928, by which time the shares which formed the nucleus of the fund had been sold & the proceeds put into other investments, & substantial additional contributions had been made to the fund by the co., the co. exercised its power of revocation in respect of the greater part of the assets of the fund & transferred that part to a new trust which was approved by the Comrs. of Inland Revenue as a superannuation fund under the said sect.—Held: the assets transferred, whether derived from the sale of the shares originally forming the nucleus of the benefit fund or from cash contributions subsequently made by the co., were paid by the co. by way of contribution towards the superannuation fund within Finance Act, 1921 (c. 32), s. 32.—*LOWE v. sa. "Repairs" & "renewal"—Railway track.—The words "repairs" & "renewal" are not expressive of a clear contrast. The fact that the wear of the rails & sleepers of a railway line although continuous is not made good annually does not render the work of renewal, when it comes to be effected, necessarily a capital charge. Expenditure may be a permissible deduction in assessing to income tax, although the benefit derived from it extends beyond the year of assessment.

Upon assessment of appts. to income tax under Bechuanaland Protectorate Income Tax Proclamation, 1922, in respect of profits from 394 miles of their railway line in the Protectorate, they claimed to debit £252,174, which they had expended in the year of assessment in renewing 74 miles of the railway track. The work, which was part of a general scheme of renewal, included the supply of new rails, sleepers, & fastenings, where necessary; steel sleepers were used in place of wooden sleepers for about half the line renewed. The renewal brought back the worn track to normal condition; as renewed it was not capable of giving more service than the original line.—Held: appts. were entitled to the deductions claimed, because the sum expended was an outgoing "not of a capital nature" within sect. 15 (1) (a) of the Proclamation, & was "expended for repairs of property occupied for the purpose of trade or in respect of which income is receivable" within sect. 15 (1) (b).—*RHODESIA RAILWAYS, LTD. v. The water tower was built of ferro-concrete, except for certain auxiliary apparatus, comprising pumps, valves & pipes. It was used for increasing the pressure of the water supply & replaced a gas engine & pumps previously used for that purpose. The reservoir, which was of the covered-in type, replaced, but on a site some distance away, an old reservoir (of the open type) which was not worth repairing. It was twice the capacity of the old one & in several respects was an improvement on the old one. The General Comrs. decided (a) that the water tower was "plant" in respect of which the co. was entitled to a deduction for wear & tear under rule 6 of Cases I. & II. of Sched. D.; & (b) that the reservoir was partly a renewal & partly an improvement & that the amount expended on that part which was a renewal was, under rule 3 (d) of Cases I. & II. of Sched. D., an admissible deduction in computing the co.'s profits.—Held: there was no evidence upon which the Comrs. could arrive at their conclusions (a) that the water tower, apart from the auxiliary apparatus, was "plant" within rule 6 of Cases I. & II. of Sched. D., & (b) that any part of the cost of the reservoir was other than capital expenditure.—MARGRETT v. LOWESTOFT WATER & GAS CO. (1935), 19 Tax Cas. 481.

sd. Depreciation—How calculated.—Applt. by agreement in writing purchased, through an intermediary co., the assets of a co. bearing the same name as applt. & referred to as the "old" co. Applt. claimed a deduction in its income for depreciation on the assets purchased from the "old" co. The Minister of National Revenue refused to allow such deduction on the ground that the "old" co. had already been allowed full depreciation on such assets & that applt. co. had taken over those assets at an appreciated, rather than true, value. Applt. appealed from the Minister's decision.—Held: depreciation as provided for in sect. 5 (1) (a) of Income War Tax Act is to be computed on the real value of the articles concerning which depreciation is claimed, & not on the cost of such articles to the taxpayer.—*PIONEER LAUNDRY & DRY CLEANERS, LTD. v. of cinematograph exhibitors, leased from another co. a sound projector system for a period of ten years. The agreement & lease with the supplemental agreements thereto, made between the two cos. provided (inter alia) that resp. co. was (a) to keep the equipment in good & efficient working order; (b) to bear the cost of such upkeep, with the exception that the lessor undertook to inspect the equipment periodically & perform certain minor adjustment services free of charge; & (c) at the termination of the lease, to deliver up the apparatus in good order & condition. The payments made by resp. co. under the lease by way of rent for the hire of the equipment & the cost of replacements, etc., were admitted as deductions in computing its profits assessable to income tax, Sched. D. On appeal against assessments for 1930-31 & 1931-32, resp. co. claimed under r. 6, Cases I. & II., Sched. D, an allowance for wear & tear of the equipment leased, contending (a) that, by reason of its obligations under the lease, it was within the terms of para. (2) of that Rule, & (b) that, for the purpose of para. (6) of the Rule, regard should be had to what would have been the actual cost to it of the equipment if it had been the owner. The General Comrs. allowed the deduction claimed:—Held: the words "actual cost" in r. 6 (6) mean actual capital cost, & as resp. co. had incurred no such cost it was not entitled to the deduction.—HEYHOE v. SLOUGH THEATRE CO., LTD. (1933), 17 Tax Cas. 488.

276b. — — — — —.]—By an agreement made in Apr. 1920, between the Birmingham Corpn. & the Dunlop Rubber Co. the Corpn. agreed to lay a tramway from the co.'s works to a point within the district of the corpn., & the co. agreed, if certain conditions were performed, to pay, & they did pay, a sum which in the event amounted to £10,806. The corpn. laid the tramway at the cost of £54,752. In 1922 the corpn. spent £271,399 on renewing its tramways & received from the Unemployed Grants Committee £46,238 in respect of the work done. By agreement between the corpn. & the Board of Revenue the life of the corpn.'s tramways was taken as twelve years; & for several years, in assessing their tramway undertaking to income tax, deductions of £4,562 (one-twelfth of £54,752) & £22,617 (one-twelfth of £271,399) were made by the corpn. & allowed by the revenue officer. The corpn., in making their returns for the purpose of assessment of their tramways to income tax, claimed to make for the years ending on Apr. 5, 1930, & Apr. 5, 1931, the same deduction as before. The Inspector of Taxes contended that "the actual cost" of the tramways to the corpn. was the total sum expended on them by the corpn.
